PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THIS work is intended to supply what was generally felt to be a desideratum—a GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, embracing within a convenient space, and of easy reference, a much greater number of names than is usually found in similar books, even when extending to several volumes; arranged according to a uniform and methodical plan, and combining, with the utmost attainable accuracy, the most authentic information up to the present time. The Author was induced to engage in this arduous undertaking, from a persuasion that his previous studies would afford him facilities for its execution, such as few have enjoyed, and from his being possessed of an extensive and valuable collection of Books, Maps, and Notes, relating to every portion of the globe, collected during a period of more than fifteen years unremittingly devoted to geographical pursuits. He has endeavoured to render these materials available for the production of a Standard Book of General Geographical Reference, by compressing every article into the smallest space consistent with distinctness, by the adoption of a simple method of abbreviation, and by classing under one entry many places of the same name. A comparison of the following table of abbreviations and explanatory notes, with the perusal of one or two of the articles, will, it is hoped, render the plan of the Work plain and intelligible. Books of this kind are often chargeable with great inaccuracy in their statements of the positions and bearings of places. This may, in part, be accounted for by the difficulty of ascertaining the proper value of foreign measurements; but it is owing chiefly to such works being mere copies of previously existing and erroneous compilations. Even in the best foreign special dictionaries, little attention is paid to this essential particular. The only remedy for this serious defect was found to be a constant reference to the best maps. Accordingly, in this Work, for the first time it is believed, the plan has been systematically followed of determining by measurement, the position, extent and bearing of every place described, comparing it, at the same time, with the most accredited printed statement. No previously existing dictionary has been followed either in method or matter; every article has been written expressly for this work from original materials, and it will be found to contain many valuable notices from recent geographical and statistical works, regarding Italy, Spain, Denmark, Russia, the Netherlands, East and West India Islands, Brazil, and other countries, which are not otherwise accessible to the English reader; as well as many changes of nomenclature introduced by the late revolution in France and other Continental states, furnished by valued foreign correspondents. A list of the most important new geographical and statistical works was prepared for the purpose of being appended to the volume, in order at once to show the value of the statements adduced, and to indicate the best authorities for further information; but the work has so far exceeded its intended limits, that this has been reluctantly abandoned.

It formed part of the plan of the work to enter every place under its proper name, and to spell it according to the best writers of the country to which it refers; thus French, Italian, Spanish, and German names are uniformly so written and accentuated, but the proper name is immediately followed by its corrupt English name, as München (Munich), Wien (Vienna), and places are generally described under the name by which they are best known in this country. For eastern names the system of spelling adopted by the Royal Geographical Society has been strictly followed. The more important places only in ancient geography, such as towns of which ruins remain, have been inserted in alphabetical order, but the ancient names of modern places are uniformly given where they are ascertained. The old provinces of France, Spain, and the Netherlands, the circles of the German Empire, and the countries forming the French Empire under Napoleon I., which, though now superseded by other divisions, are still often referred to, are described in the order of the alphabet. In so far as the limited space would permit, accurate notices have been given of the geology and physical geography, the meteorological and mineralogical conditions of countries and districts. Great care has been taken to ascertain the true elevation of mountains above the level of the sea, and wherever foreign authorities have been relied on, their measurements have been uniformly rendered into English equivalents. In a book comprising such a great multiplicity of facts, derived from works written in many different languages, in each of which a different standard of measurement is used; and in which the statements are often vague and sometimes contradictory, it is impossible altogether to avoid errors and omissions. For these, allowance will be most readily made by those who are best able to detect and remedy them. But from the plan on which this work has been conducted, and the scrupulous care bestowed on every portion of its progress, it is hoped that these will be found to be unimportant.

EDINBURGH, May 1850

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

THE demand for a New Edition of this work has afforded an opportunity of bringing the information it contains down to the present date, and of rendering it more worthy of the very favourable reception it has already met with. During the few years that have elapsed since its first publication, vast strides have been made in geographical knowledge, and considerable changes have taken place in the political relations of countries. New enumerations of the people have been made in Great Britain, France, America; in many of the Kingdoms and States of Germany, in several of the countries of India, and in the colonial possessions of the principal European States; while numerous places, formerly of little general interest, have risen into importance since the commencement of the present war.

Accurate, and where requisite, detailed, information on each of these subjects, from authentic and trustworthy sources, embracing new discoveries of places, rectifications of positions, the latest returns of population, trade, colonial and other products, revenue, naval and military resources, historical events, new railways and navigation routes, will be found embodied in this edition, in which so many additional places have been described, that the number now amounts to nearly fifty thousand entries. Omissions in the principal articles have also been supplied, and the number of abbreviations has been greatly reduced. In order to effect these changes without increasing the bulk of the book, most of the less important articles have been condensed, while care has been taken to retain every essential particular.

So large a portion of the volume has thus been re-written, and the remainder has been so thoroughly revised and corrected, that it may fairly claim to be considered a New Work, the most recent, and, it is believed, the most comprehensive of its class.

* * This Work has, without the Author's consent, been reprinted in America from the First Edition, which, of course, does not contain the additions and corrections comprised in the present issue.

EDINBURGH, May 1855.

In the present Edition, while the whole has been revised and rectified to this date, special attention has been paid to the late territorial changes in India, and to the Colonial possessions of Great Britain. The Author is indebted to his friend Mr W. Westgarth, for the very recent and accurate series of articles on the Australian Colonies.

DISTANCES ARE UNIFORMLY STATED DIRECT.

MEASUREMENTS are stated in English feet and English miles.

TEMPERATURE is given according to the scale of Fahrenheit's thermometer.

The name in italics after the leading word generally expresses the ancient name of a place, but sometimes it indicates a variety of the national name.

In compound names the leading word is generally given under the specific letter with the prefix following, as Andrews (St); but in some instances the prefix forms the leading word, as in SAN, SANTO, SAO, etc.; and in the United States of North America, EAST, WEST, etc.

The POPULATIONS, AREAS, DISTANCES, ELEVATIONS ABOVE THE SEA, TEMPERATURE, and CAPTALS OF COUNTRIES, will be found near the beginning of each article.

MOUNTAINS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

In the recently published Account of the Triangulation of the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain and Ireland, the elevations of many disputed points have been finally determined; and Ben Nevis, the highest point in the British islands, is now ascertained to be 4,408 feet above the sea level, and 110 feet higher than Ben Macdui. The following table of altitudes, while presenting a connected view of the mountains of Britain, will serve to correct the elevations stated under the separate heads:—

ABYSSINIA ABYSSINIA or HABESHA, an extensive country, on the eastern coast of Africa lying between lat 3° and 16° N, lon 34° and 45° E, bounded on the N W by Nubia, N E by the Red Sea, S by the country of the Galla, and on the W by countries almost unknown in the interior of Africa. Estimated area 245,000 sq m Pop (estimated) 4,500,000 Is a hilly country, rising from the low arid districts on the borders of the Red Sea, in ranges of lofty mountains, with tablelands intersected by valleys The Samen range is the highest in the country, and together with the Lamalmon and Lasta, form a long but broken chain running N E and S W The Ambattau and the Beyeda are 12,000 feet in elevation, whilst the Abba Jarreh and the Bushat are 15,000 feet high Lying between the Samen mountains and the Red Sea, and parallel with the coast, is the Taranta range, which is 7,000 feet high. The summits of the highest mountains are covered with snow nearly all the year The tablelands have been classed into three distinct groups or terraces, rising one above the other from the shores of the Red Sea The first is the plain of Baharnagash, lying to the W. of the Taranta mountains, and extending to the river Mareb The second is the plain of Tigré, lying between the Mareb and Tacaze rivers The third is the plain of Amhara, separated from the foregoing by the Samen mountains, its mean elevation is 3,000 feet The country descends from this to the unexplored regions of the west The important rivers are the Abai (Bahr-el-Azrek or Blue River), Tacaze or Athara, and the Hawash The former, which is the eastern branch of the Nile, rises from two mountains near Geesh, at an elevation of 10,000 feet above the sea It then flows first N to the Lake of Dembea, through which it has a perceptible current, it then takes a semicircular sweep round the province of Gogam, and afterwards N, when it unites with the Bahr-el-Abiad or White River, which is now supposed to be the true Nile The Tacaze has its rise in the mountains of Lasta, and after draining those of Samen and Tigré, it falls into the Nile The Hawash takes its rise in the S of Abyssinia, and, flowing in a N E direction towards the Red Sea is lost in Lake Abbebad The Mareb rises in the mountains of Taranta, and flows parallel to the Tacaze, is afterwards lost in the sand, but in the rainy season, is supposed to reach the Tacaze river Besides these, there are other small rivers which rise in the mountains, and are lost in the sandy plains below, or fall into larger rivers or lakes The Dembea or Trana Lake, in the country of Amhara, is the largest in Abyssinia It is 60 m long and 40 m broad, is fed by several rivulets, and abounds in small islands In the country is Ashangee Lake, 30 m long, and 15 m broad In the S of Abyssinia, in the Gulf of Bah-el-Mandeb, is Assal Lake, which is of an elliptical form, and is 7 m in length It is half filled with water of the deepest cerulean blue, and half with a solid sheet of glittering snow-white salt, and is 570 feet below the level of Bah el-Mandeb Gulf Abyssinia presents almost every variety of climate, from the burning heat of a tropical sun on the coast, to severe cold on the summits of its snow-covered mountains On the table lands the air is pure and bracing, whilst in the valleys the heat is suffocating Soil is very fertile, some places producing three crops yearly, vegetation increasing as it rises from the windy coast On the table-lands are extensive pasturage, and on the tops of the mountains are cedar forests The fruits are the date, orange, lemon, pomegranate, and banana On the western mountains, coffee grows wild, and on its western declivities, the cotton plant is found in abundance In other parts of the country, sugar-cane, vine, wheat, barley, teff (Poa-Abyssinica), of which is made the bread in general use in the country The natives cultivate all kinds of esculent vegetables Myrrh, senna, and other medicinal plants are plentiful Most of the European domestic animals are found here Horses are strong and active, and oxen plentiful The Galla ox (a remarkable species) has horns four feet long Sheep and goats are numerous, but the former are small, and have black wool Wild animals comprise the two-horned rhinoceros, elephant, striped hyena, lion, panther, leopard (black and common) wolf, booted lynx, camelopard, zebra, quagga, camel, and monkey Birds of all kinds abound, besides serpents, crocodiles, and hippopotami The bees here much cared for, honey being an important part of the food of the inhabitants, and several of the provinces pay a large proportion of their tribute in honey Of an opposite class is the locust, the ravages of which are terrible In a geological point of view, Abyssinia presents the most remarkable and complex features in the world, comprising extinct volcanoes, hot springs, repositories of sulphur, rock salt, combustible substances, and malachite. Minerals are granite, slate, gneiss, antimony, iron, gold and silver. S.E. of Tigré is an extensive plain of salt, which to the depth of 2 feet is pure, and so hard as to require to be cut with a hatchet, at a greater depth it is coarser and softer, till purified by the air. The religion of the Abyssinians is a degraded form of Christianity. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are dispensed after the manner of the Greek Church. The inhabitants are rude and barbarous; being continually engaged in war, human life is not respected. Agriculture is chiefly followed by the people. Manufactures comprise leather, parchment, cotton cloths, tapestry fabricated from wool and goats' hair, and of iron and brass. Principal imports are lead, tin, copper, silk, gunpowder, glass, Indian goods, Persian carpets, French cloths, and coloured skins from Egypt. Exports are ivory, gold, slaves, cattle, cotton cloth, mules, and honey. Has only one harbour, and there are no roads or navigable rivers to facilitate intercourse with the interior; hence the traffic is carried on by means of caravans, and when travelling, merchants are exposed to the attacks of wild marauding hordes, and subjected to high taxes. Abyssinia is now divided into several independent kingdoms, the most important of which are Tigré, Amhara, Gondar, and Shoa.

South Adelaide. It is well laid out. The streets, having respectively a width of 66, 99, and 132 ft., intersect each other at right angles. They are also of sufficient elevation above the river to admit of a proper system of drainage. The first settlement was made on 27th July 1836, and the survey of the town lands was completed in March 1837. The progress of the city has been rapid. At first it consisted of a few huts of straw and mud covered with canvas, or thatched with reeds. These were followed by dwellings in the cottage style of brick and stone, with roofs of slate or shingle. Gradually, edifices of a more imposing character sprang into existence. Under the auspices of the corporation, various improvements of a public nature were from time to time effected. It is surrounded by a public demesne, termed the Park Land, for the breadth of half a mile. The city has a governor's house, government offices, commissariat stores, jail, three banks besides the savings bank, parliament house, court house, railway station, theatre, hospitals, lunatic asylum, philanthropic institution, exchange, and a botanic garden; has Episcopalian, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, Independent, Baptist, Unitarian, Methodist, and German Lutheran churches; a Friends' meeting-house, Jews' synagogue, and numerous schools. Manufactures—woollens, machinery, soap, and candles; breweries, tanneries, carriages, iron and brass foundries, potteries, soda-water, saw mills and flour mills. There are two daily and two weekly newspapers published. Waterworks are in course of construction. It is (1859) in contemplation to light the city with gas. It is proposed to embellish the principal streets by having trees planted along the kerb each side of the thoroughfare. The city is connected with several other towns by railway. An extensive system of telegraphs are in operation, and projected. There are several public societies in active operation. The quickest voyage to Adelaide by a sailing vessel was from Plymouth in 77 days, on the great circle route. Average voyage is about 105 days.—Port-Adelaide harbour has been deepened to 18 feet. ADRIANOPOLE, ADRIENOPOLIS EDIRNEH (Hadrianopolis), a city of European Turkey, prov Rumelia, built partly on a hill, and partly on the banks of the Tundja, near its confluence with the Maritza, 137 m N W Constantinople. Lat 41° 41' 27" N, lon 26° 30' 41" E. Pop 100,000. It is considered as the second cap of the Empire. Formerly the suburbs were surrounded by a strong wall commanded by 12 towers and a citadel, but these are now in ruins. It has an arsenal, a cannon foundry, numerous caravanserais and bazaars. On the rt. b. of the Tundja, which is crossed by a fine stone bridge, is situated the Eski Serai, the old palace of the sultans, now much decayed. Excellent wines made in its vicinity, and large fields of roses for the manuf. of "attars," or essence of roses. Possesses important manufs of silks, woollens, and lins, has celebrated dye works, tanneries, and an active commerce in manufactured goods, and the products of a fertile district. The chief outlet for this commerce is the port of Enos, which was taken by the Russians 20th August 1829. Was the cap of the Ottoman Empire from 1366 to 1455. Hadrianopolis was founded by the Emperor Hadrian on the site of the anc. Orestia.

ADRIATICO SEA (Ital. Mare Adriatico) or GULF OF VENICE, is that part of the Mediterranean which extends from the S E, at lat. 40° to the N. W., at lat. 45° 48' N, between the coasts of Italy, Hyria, and Albania. It takes its name from the city of Adria, and forms on the W. the Gulf of Manfredonia, on the coast of Naples. The N.W. part bears the name of the Gulf of Venice. On the E. side are the Gulfs of Triest, Fiume, and Cattaro, on the coast of Austria, and of Drino in Albania. The water of this sea contains more salt than that of the ocean, and the influence of the tides is little felt. Shores are generally low on the Venetian side; has many shoals, and its muddy shores are covered with unwholesome marshes. Greatest depth is only 22 fathoms, and a great part of it is less than 12 fathoms. On the Dalmatian side the waves dash against enormous rocks, or ripple among beautiful strands formed by the numerous islands which environ the coast, affording to vessels a secure retreat from storms. During summer the navigation of the gulf is safe and simple, because the prevailing wind is favourable for leaving it, but in winter the S.E. winds cause much destruction. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance, except the Adige and the Po. Its greatest length, from Cape Leuca to Trieste, is 450 m., and its mean breadth is 90 miles.

Adro, a town of Austrian Italy, Lombardy, cap. dist. 10 m. W.N.W. Brescia. Pop. 2,214.

Adrook, a pa. of England, co. Bucks, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N.W. Winslow. Area 1,180 ac. Pop. 393.

Aff-Fuddle or Affpundell, a pa. of England, co. Dorset, 7 m. E.N.E. Dorchester. Area 4,940 ac. Pop. 438.

Affrique (Str), a comm. and town of France, dep. Aveyron on the Sorgue, 29 m. S.S.E. Rhodéz. Pop. 6,618. Trade in Roquefort cheese.

Afghanistan, Afghan-land, an extensive inland country of Asia, lying between lat. $26^{\circ} 50'$ and $36^{\circ} 30' N.$; lon. 60° and $72^{\circ} 30' E.$, having E. the Punjab, S. Bwhalpoor, Sunde, and Beloochistan, W. the Persian dominion, and N. Independent Turkestan (Balkh, Koondooz, Kafiristan), from which it is separated by the Hindoo Koosh and its prolongations. Area estimated at 225,000 sq. m., and the pop. at 5,120,000. Four-fifths of the country consist of rocks and mountains. Hindoo Koosh is 20,493 feet high. From the table-land in the N., many mountain ranges proceed to the S.E. and W., varying from 15,000 to 16,000 feet in height, and enclosing numerous valleys and small plains, some of which are fertile and well watered. The S.W. part of the country is a desert, with an elevation of 3,000 to 5,000 feet. Chief rivers the Cabool, Helmand, Gomul, Lora, etc.; but none is of great size. The morass Hamoon in the S.W. scarcely belongs to Afghanistan: the only lake of consequence is that of Ab-latada. The vegetation in the low lands is like that of India; rice, cotton, the sugar-cane, millet, maize, and turmeric, are raised. In the uplands the timber-trees, herbs, and fruits of Europe, grow wild; and wheat, barley, beans, turnips, mustard, and artificial grasses, are cultivated. Cabool is supposed to excel all other cities in the variety and excellence of its fruits. Gold, silver, mercury, iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, sulphur, and naphtha, are met with. Arts and husbandry are in a low condition; manufactures of cotton, woollen, silk stuffs, saddlery, harness, and cattle trappings, for home use. Sheep and goats are abundant, producing a fine wool used in manufacturing shawls. Imports, coarse cottons, indigo, muslins, silks, brocade, ivory, wax, sandal-wood, sugar, and spices from India; horses, gold, silver, cochineal, and broad cloth from Turkestan; cutlery, hardware, and other European goods from Russia, through Bokhara; silks, cottons, embroidery, and chintz from Persia; slaves from Arabia and Abyssinia; silks, tea, porcelain, dyes, and precious metals overland from China; dates and coconuts from Beloochistan. Altogether the imports amount to 600,000*l.* a year. The exports consist of madder, saffron, tobacco, fruits, horses, furs, shawls, and chintz to India; shawls, turbans, indigo, and other Indian produce, to Turkestan; and the same articles, with Horat carpets, to Persia. The demand for British manufactures has lately increased so as nearly to supersede the importation of manufactured goods overland from Russia. Transit trade considerable, and wholly conducted by means of camels and horses, the employment of wheeled vehicles being impracticable. The population comprises Belooches, Usbecks, Huzarehs, Kimaiks, Persians, and Hindoos, but the great mass are of the Afghan race, and Mohammedans of the Sunnite sect. The Afghans are divided into numerous tribes or clans, the most noted of which are the Dooranees, Kuzoyzees, Ghiljes, and Labanees; the last named being the principal traders, and the first, the tribe in which the monarchy has long been hereditary. The country is subdivided into the three separate principalities of Cabool, Candahar, and Herat. Chief cities Cabool, Candahar, Herat, Peshawar, Jelalabad, and Ghuznee.

AFIUM-KARA-HISSAR (Black Castle of Opium), a city of Asia Minor, in Anatolia, cap. of Sanjakk, on a mountain side, 60 m. S.E. Kütahya. Pop. estim. at 60,000. (?) Is well built; has a citadel on a lofty rock, mosques, chapels, baths, khans, manufs. of black felts, carpets, saddlery, stirrups, and a trade in opium, grown near.

AFRAGOLA, a town of Naples, cap. cant., prov. and 6 m. N.N.E. Naples. Pop. 14,000. With extensive manufactures of straw bonnets.

AFRICA, Lûga, one of the five great divisions of the globe, forming a vast peninsula, joined to Asia by the Isthmus of Suez, and separated from Europe by the Strait of Gibraltar, bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, S. and W. by the Atlantic. Its extreme points are, N. Cape Bogiarion in Algeria, lat. 37° 6' N., lon. 6° 28' E.; S. Cape Agulhas, lat. 34° 49' S., lon. 20° E.; W. Cape Verd, lat. 14° 43' N., lon. 17° 34' W.; and E. Cape Guardafui, lat. 11° 50' N., lon. 51° 18' E. Length about 4,800, and extreme breadth 4,000 m. Area estim. at 11,376,000 sq. m., and pop. at 60,000,000. It is divided near the centre by the equator, and the greater part of it lies within the tropics.—Orography. A border of high and mountainous land, with partial interruptions, extends round the edge of the continent, while the interior is occupied by a succession of plateaus and plains. On the N.W., Mount Atlas and its ramifications covers a large portion of Morocco and Algeria, rising in Mount Miltin to 11,400 feet. From Tunis to the delta of the Nile, the shores are low, except at Jebel Acedar, in lon. 20° E. From the Nile delta, a series of terrace-formed rocky hills stretches S. along the shores of the Red Sea to the alpine region of Abyssinia, a mass of elevated table land, topped by high mountains, of which Ras Debschen is 15,986, and Abba Jarret 15,000, feet above the sea. From Abyssinia to the equator, the coast country is high, rising, on the N. shore of the Somal country, to 6,500 ft. S. of the equator, the isolated peaks of Kenia and Kilimandjaro mountains are estimated to be 20,000 feet above the sea, and supposed to be snow-clad. The coast region continues high toward the S.; but where interrupted by the Zambeze and Lapeta rivers, it is only 600 or 800 ft. high. S. of the Zambeze the country rises, in the Quetlamba or Drakenberg Mountains, to the Compass Berg, the highest point in the Cape Colony, 10,300 ft. above the sea. The high ridges is continued W. through the centre of the Cape Colony by the Sneeuw Mountains to the Orange River; and Table Mountain, at the S.W. extremity of the continent, is

3,816 feet high. The mountain zone stretches northward between the coast and the Kalahari desert; and in Damara Land, Omatako Mountain rises to 8,780 feet. The mountain border continues N. to the Bight of Biafra, where the Cameroons Mountains are 13,750 feet above the sea. Beyond the delta of the Niger, King William Mountains, 2,000 to 3,000 feet, are succeeded by the Serarte Mountains, 1,278 ft.; Kennel Mountains, 3,200 ft.; and the Kong Mountains, 2,000 to 3,000 ft.; and the high border land terminates abruptly in Senegambia, leaving a wide expanse of nearly level desert between this and Morocco. The continent is remarkable for its vast extent of desert: in the N., the region of the Sahara, stretching from the Atlantic Ocean to the Nile, is, in its W. portion, an immense region of sand; but in the centre and E. it is traversed by hills, and a sandstone plateau, 1,000 to 1,400 ft. above the sea, interspersed with green and fertile, but unhealthy, oases. S. of Tripoli the surface of the country varies from 1,000 ft. to a plateau of 4,000 or 5,000 ft. S.W. of Mourzouk, similar heights, interspersed with valleys, extend S. to the country of Air or Ashan. The table-land of Agades is 2,000 feet; but, in the high land of Soudan, Mount Gediyo is 3,000, Mount Mindif, S. of Lake Tchad, 8,000, and Mount Alaotaki 9,000, ft. above the sea. From this point elevated land is believed to extend about the parallel of 10° N. eastward to Kordofan; but the central region, within 9° or 10° on each side of the equator, are still unexplored. Barth has described a great portion of Negroland as a low, swampy region; and shallow water-courses is one of the characteristic features of N. Central Africa, formerly considered a dry, elevated waste. The interior of S. Africa, explored by Livingstone, has the form of an elevated trough, the outer mountainous border enclosing an immense region of undulating and fertile table-lands, with no lofty mountains, but elevated and well-defined watersheds, through which flows the Zambeze, the main stream of a vast system of rivers, between lat. 10° and 20° S., and traversing the whole of the interior. S.W. of this region the Kalahari desert, not quite destitute of vegetation, is 3,600 ft. high, sloping towards the Orange River, where it is 2,000 feet. W. of the Kalahari desert, Namagua land extends for 148,000 sq. m., a barren, desolate region, nearly uninhabitable from want of water. S. of the Orange River, the Karoo plain is an arid tract 200 m. long and 50 broad. S. of this, and N. of the Cape Mountains, the table-land is 600 ft. above the sea, and part of it is cultivated.—Hydrography. Of the rivers which flow N. to the Mediterranean, the Nile is by far the most important; those of Morocco and Algeria, though numerous, having only short courses. To the Atlantic flow the waters of the Senegal, the Niger or Quorra, Congo or Zaïre, Conanza, Orange or Gariep; and to the Indian Ocean, the Jubb, Zambeze, Limpopo, and Great Fish rivers. There are few lakes in Africa, in comparison to its immense extent. Of these, Lake Tchad, the largest, drains a considerable extent of country by the rivers Yaou and Shary. The others are, Lake Dembea, in Abyssinia; Melgrig, in Algeria; Lake Dilola, on the watershed between the rivers which flow E. to the Zambeze, and W. to the Congo, 4,000 feet above sea level; and Lake Nyami, in lat. 20° 18' S., about 80 m. long, and 2,825 feet above the sea.—Climate. Africa is mostly within the tropics; and, from the nature of its surface, is the hottest of all the continents. The maximum temperature of the globe occurs N. of the equator, where, within an elliptical space, between Lake Tchad and the Red Sea, the mean annual temperature is 81°, and that of July 90°, Fahr., but it is subject to great changes, and over the whole of the Sahara the temperature varies 80° Fahr., from maximum to minimum, and ice is often formed. S. of the Sahara, where the country is more elevated, the temperature is lower. The centre of S. Africa has a distinct winter cold, varying with latitude; and in the central parts of the Cape Colony the cold in winter is often severe, and the ground is covered with snow. N. Africa comprises a considerable portion of the great rainless belt of the old world, yet rain falls periodically in torrents, even in some parts of the desert. In S. Africa, rain sometimes pours for months together; and in Sierra Leone, on the W., the rain-fall amounts to 180 inches annually. Hot winds, called the Simoon and the Harmattan, prevail in the N. and W. of Africa. During their prevalence the air is filled with dust, the skin of man is parched, and timber is warped.—In Vegetation, the products of this vast continent are as abundant as they are varied; wherever nature or art supplies water, there vegetable life flourishes with the greatest exuberance. On the Atlas range, and the borders of the Sahara, the date-tree yields the staple food of the inhabitants; and a strip of country there is called the "land of dates." The Adansonia digitata is the most common tree in the centre of N. Africa, and the tamarind tree is the chief ornament of Negroland. The baobab tree (Ficus indica), the sago palm, oil palm, sugar cane, coffee, tobacco, and cotton, are found from the S. border of the Sahara to the valley of the Zambeze, where Livingstone found the grape-bearing vine growing wild. Rice is cultivated in the moist countries of Negroland, and wheat has been introduced.—Zoology. The animal kingdom is still more varied and original than the vegetable; nearly all the species of the old world are represented in their best varieties. Domestic animals are the horse of Barbary and Arabia, the Cape buffalo, the mule of Senegal, and the zebra; and, among wild animals, the lion, elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, giraffe, camel, gazelle, antelope, and monkey. The forests abound in parrots of bright plumage; the ostrich and many other birds are peculiar to Africa. The crocodile is the chief reptile, and there are few poisonous serpents. Among many thousands of insects, the locust is the most destructive; and a venomous fly, called the tsetse, whose bite is fatal to nearly all domestic animals, abounds in the S.—The Mineral products comprise gold and iron; copper and silver are unknown. Coal was extracted near Mozambique in 1858.—Topography. The great divisions of Africa are—on the N. Barbary, Egypt, and the great desert Sahara; on the W. Senegambia, Upper and Lower Guinea; on the E. Nubia and Abyssinia, the coast of Ajan, Zanguebar, Mozambique, and Caffraria; and on the S. the Cape Colony. In the centre, Boudan or Nigrita on the N., and the recently discovered countries of the Zambeze on the S., of the equator.—Islands. The Azores, Madeira islands, Canary and Cape Verde islands, Fernando Po, Princes Island, in the Gulf of Guinea, Ascension and St Helena, in the Atlantic. Socotra, Comoro islands, the Seychelles, Zanguebar, the Mascarene islands (Mauritius, Reunion, etc.), and Madagascar, in the Indian Ocean.—Man. The population of the N. comprises Turks, Arabs, Jews, and French. The descendants of the aborigines are the Berbers of the Atlas region, the Tibbons and Tuaricks of Sahara, and the Copts of Egypt. The Moors are of a mixed descent. The Ethiopian group of nations is dispersed in great variety over all Africa, S. of the Great Desert, and a large portion of the island of Madagascar. The Negro tribes are limited to the W.; there are few in the interior of Africa. In the more elevated regions of the S., the colour of the natives is often a light bronze; the Caffres have heads finely developed, and strongly European. The Hottentots inhabit the Cape Colony and its borders. A corrupt form of the Christian religion is professed in Abyssinia; Mohammedanism is prevalent in the N.; and Fetichism is the most widely spread and degrading form of superstition. The Negroes appear to possess the power of imitation in an extraordinary degree. Those of the W. coast know how to temper steel, and those of Senegal are expert jewellers. The Ovas of Madagascar work in iron, and manufacture linen, valued in commerce. The inhabitants of Morocco and Barbary have always excelled in the preparation of skins. The manufacturers of cloth in Bornou supply all Central Africa; and the natives of the Grain Coast engage as sailors in European vessels. Devoted missionaries have introduced civilisation and Christianity among the tribes of the W. and S.; and the infamous trade in slaves has been abandoned by the nations of Europe and America.—European Possessions. The regencies of Tripoli and Tunis, and the viceroyalty of Egypt, recognise the political sovereignty of the Ottoman Porte. Portugal possesses the govts. of Madeira, Cape Verd, and the Bissagos, St Thomas and Princes Islands, the govt. of Angola comprising great part of Congo on the W., and that of Mozambique on the E. England has establishments in Senegambia and Sierra Leone, on the Gold and Slave Coasts, the islands of Fernando Po, Ascension, St Helena, and Tristan d'Arunga in the Atlantic, the islands Mauritius, Rodriguez, the Seychelles, and Amirantes, and Socotra, in the Indian Ocean, Natal, and the colony of the Cape of Good Hope. France possesses St Luis and Goree in Senegal, the islands of Reunion (Bourbon), Ste. Marie, Mayotte, Nossi Bé, etc., in the Indian Ocean, and the colony of Algeria. The Netherlands govt. possesses several factories on the coast of Guinea, of which St George Elmina is the seat of govt. Liberia, under a native president, was recognised as a free republic in 1848. Exports, gold dust, ivory, gum, wax, marococo, leather, indigo, copper, salt, and dates. Imports (by caravans to the interior), guns, pistols, sabres (of English manufacture), glass wares, coarse woollens, silks, printed muslins, razors, spices and perfumes.

Country houses line a part of the ancient canal leading to the W. arm of the Nile, which was restored by the late Mehemet Ali. There are two ports, in the W. and best of which ships anchor in from 22 to 40 feet water. A castle called Fasillon, and serving as a landmark to sailors, replaces the famous Pharos of antiquity. Alexandria is the great emporium of Egypt. Principal exports, corn, cotton, wool, gums, soda, rice, dates, senna, feathers, and other African products, hides, and a few manuf. goods. In 1840, 86,342 bales of cotton were exported, mostly to England, France, and Austria. Principal imports, cotton, woollen, and silk goods, hardware and machinery, with timber, coal, drugs, and colonial products. In 1840 the value of the imports amounted to 1,367,806*l.*, and that of the exports to 1,072,932*l.* In 1843, 1,382 merchant vessels arrived, and 1,477 left Alexandria, mostly British, Turkish, Austrian, Tuscan, French, and Greek. Alexandria is an important station in the overland route to India, and is now (1869) connected by railway with Suez. Consuls of the chief European countries reside here. Of the ancient city, the cisterns, catacombs, Pompey's pillar, and the obelisk called Cleopatra's needle, are the principal remains. March 21, 1801, the French were defeated by the British under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who was mortally wounded in the battle of Alexandria.

ALGERIA (French, Algérie), a country of North Africa, Barbary, forming a French colonial government, cap. Algiers. This territory is situated between lat. 36° 37' 5" N.; extending from lon. 2° 11' W. to 8° 53' E.; length about 560 m., greatest breadth about 200 m. Pop. (1861) 2,561,003, comprising 2,429,720 natives and 131,283 Europeans. Algeria is bounded N. by the Mediterranean, S. by the Sahara, E. by Tunis, and W. by Morocco; is traversed throughout by the Atlas mountains, which rise in successive stages parallel with the coast, the highest points exceeding 7,000 feet. The coast is steep and deficient in good ports. The chief plains are those of Oran, Metidjah, and Sherif; the principal rivers are the Wad-el-Gedy, which rises S. of the

Atlas range, and flows to the Melgig Lake; the Shelif, which rises on the borders of Sahara, and flows to the Mediterranean; the others are the Sebna, Ineer, Harna, and Jafna. There are several lakes, called sebkhah, which are generally dry in summer; the chief of these are in the prov. Algiers, the Zagries in Constantine, the Shott and the Sebkhah in the S.E. of the Melgig. The climate is temperate and healthy on the N. slopes of the mountains, but pestilential in the marshy plains. The heat is often excessive under the influence of the sirocco, or hot wind of the desert. From April to October the sky is serene, the winter is mild, and marked by abundant rains; in 1846 there were 57 rainy days and 56 storms. The mean temperature of winter is from 54° to 63°, and of summer 74° to 104° Fahr.; but this elevated temperature is moderated by constant sea breezes. The mountains contain mines of iron, copper, and lead, but their extent is imperfectly known. In the mountains of Bou Haura there are rich iron mines, which appear to have been worked by the Romans. The country is divided by the natives into the Tel or country of grain crops, in the N., and the date country in the S. Vegetation is developed with great activity. The level part of the Tel, occupied by Arabs, is fertile in cereals, and the mountainous country, occupied by the Kabyles, has extensive forests, and rich and varied vegetation. The Algerian Sahara is not, as was supposed, a sterile desert, but a vast archipelago of oases, each of which presents an animated group of towns and villages, surrounded by olives, figs, vines, and palms. Throughout the Tel, wheat, barley, and legumes are extensively cultivated, and in some places maize, mullet, and rice are raised. Cotton, indigo, and the sugar-cane succeed well. The natives rear cattle, sheep, and goats. The horses, which are of an excellent breed, are employed only for the saddle; the camel, dromedary, ass, and mule are used for draught. Among wild animals may be noticed the lion, panther, jackal, and antelope. The harvests are sometimes ravaged by locusts. Excellent coral and sponge is fished on the coasts. The industry of the natives, which formerly consisted chiefly of weaving and the preparation of maroccco leather, is, since the French domination, nearly confined to mining; the Jews alone engage in the manufacture of jewellery. Civilization is making rapid progress in the state. In 1832, there were three native colleges, 393 schools for the advanced pupils, and 831 primary schools for native boys. Since 1848, the Arabs have made roads and bridges, built 3,732 stone houses, and planted 1,000,000 fruit trees. Within five years 5,000 Arabs have been vaccinated. During the first nine months of 1846, 5,606 vessels entered the different ports of Algeria; the total imports in 1849 amounted to 65,251,522 fr., and the exports to 9,802,406 fr., and the public revenue, which in 1840 was only 5,610,707 fr., amounted in 1846 to 24,773,625 fr. The country, originally inhabited by the Moors and Numidians, was afterwards under the power of the Romans and Vandals. In the 16th century it was invaded by Spain, but Barbarossa expelled the Spanish, and founded, under the sovereignty of Turkey, the state of Algiers, which became redoubtable to Christians on account of its corsairs, and compelled many of the European states to pay tribute for the protection of their merchant vessels. Repeated attempts were made by the different European powers to subdue this nest of pirates, without effect, till 1816, when the city of Algiers was bombarded by the British under

Lord Exmouth, after which they continued comparatively quiet until 1837, when the French government, to revenge an insult to their consul, resolved to send an expedition on a great scale to take possession of the country. This was accomplished in 1830; but although the French have nominal possession of the whole territory, only a small portion of the inhabitants acknowledge their authority. Algérie is divided into the provs. of Algiers, Constantine, and Oran, and governed, according to a royal ordinance of 1st Sept. 1847, by a governor-general, whose authority is chiefly military.

ALPS MOUNTAINS.—The Alps are the most remarkable mountains in Europe, whether in regard to extent or elevation; they form a crescent-shaped chain, which extends from the Mediterranean, between the Gulfs of Lyons and Genoa on the W., to the plains of Hungary on the E., nearly 800 m. in length. They may be divided into the following groups:—the West Alps, which have a general direction from S. to N., and extend, under the names of the Maritime Alps, from the sea to Mont Viso, near the sources of the Po; the Cottian Alps, which prolong the chain to Mont Cenis, and include Mont Genève; and the Gratian Alps (Alpes Graies), which include Little St Bernard, and terminate at Mont Blanc. The East Alps, or those chains which extend from W. to E., having much greater breadth, are separated into a N. and S. series; the former comprise the Bernese Alps on the N. of the valley of the Rhone, the Alps of St Gall on N.W. of the valley of the Rhine, the Noric Alps which may be considered as extending from Lake Constance to the Kahlenberg, near Vienna, and the Syrian Alps, a small chain between the Noric and Carnic Alps. The S. series is composed of the Pennine Alps, between Mont Blanc and Monte Rosa; the Lepontine Alps, thence to Mont Bernardin, near the sources of the Upper Rhine; the Rhetian Alps, which terminate at Monte Croce, near the sources of the Piave; and the Carnic Alps, extending to the lowest part of the river Mur, which separates them from the mountains of Bahary. Mont Blanc, which attains an elevation of 15,744 feet, is the culminating point of the Alps and of all Europe; the other principal summits are Mont Rosa, 15,174 feet, Finsteraarhorn, in the Bernese Alps, 14,106 feet, Mont Viso, 12,585 feet, the Orlier Spitz in the Rhetian Alps, 12,852 feet, the Gross Glockner in the Noric Alps, 12,431 feet, the Terglou in the Carnic Alps, 9,380 feet, and the Eisenkne in the Styrian Alps. The most frequented passes are the Col de Tende in the Maritime Alps, 6,890 feet, the pass of Mont Genèvre in the Cottian Alps, 6,560 feet; that of Mont Cenis, 6,775 feet; the pass of the Great St Bernard, 8,150 feet, and the Simplon, 6,592 feet, both in the Pennine Alps; the pass of Mont St Gothard in the Lepontine Alps, 6,976 feet, the Spiggen, 6,939 feet, in the Rhetian Alps, the Loiblberg in the Carnic Alps, and the Semmering in the Noric Alps; the St-Jeiz, in Austria, 9,100 feet, is the highest carriage pass in the Alps, and that of St Gothard is the only one which is carried over the crest of the mountains, the others generally cross by the beds of torrents. The higher Alps are covered with perpetual snow, to 3,400 metres above the sea, and present in their magnificent glaciers the innumerable cascades which are precipitated from their summits, and the forests and meadows which cover their flanks, the most imposing and picturesque scenery in Europe. In the range of the Alps, the glaciers are estimated at 400 in number, and cover an area of 1,400 sq. m. These move more or less rapidly, according to the heat and moisture of the weather; their mean rate of motion is from 1 to 4 feet in 24 hours, the greatest velocity, as in rivers, being at the centre. The largest rivers of Europe, including the Danube, Rhine, Rhone, Inn, Drave, Save, and Po, rise in the Alps or their subordinate ranges. The central and higher ridges of the Alps consist of granite, gneiss, and other primary rocks, flanked by a wide extent of limestone, sandstone, and slate. The higher summits ascend considerably above the lower level of perpetual snow (which in this latitude averages 8,900 feet above the sea); the glaciers descend as low as 3,400 feet above the sea. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 3,800 feet, oats at 4,000 feet, barley at 5,100 feet; the oak is found to the height of 4,500 feet, pines and larches as high as 6,500 feet above the sea, and the Alpine rose reaches the limit of perpetual snow. Mineral products are chiefly iron, copper, and lead, but quicksilver, rock salt, and some gold and silver, are met with. In the French Alps, near Grenoble, small veins containing gold have been worked, after being neglected for half a century, the works were resumed in 1837. [Notes of the principal summits and passes in the Alps will be found under their respective names.]

ALTAI, an extensive mountain system of Upper Asia, stretching from the 80° E lon to the shores of the Sea of Okhotsk, and forming the entire line of separation between the empires of Russia and China. Length from E to W, including the Altan range nearly 5,000 m. This chain, however, has various names in its different sections, and the term Altai is usually confined to the W portion of the system, between the rivers Irisk and Selenga, or from lon 88° to 167° E. E of the latter point (Lake Baikal) it abuts on the ranges of the Khing Khan or Yablonoi mountains, which reach eastward to the Pacific at the N end of Saghalien isl. The Altai consists of several collateral ranges, the loftiest Tanguin Oola, lying within the Chinese boundary. The mean elevation of the chain may be from 3,000 to 7,000 feet, but Mont Bialakha, near the head of the Ob, is estimated at 10,300 feet. The summits are not peaked, but nearly level plains of considerable extent, interspersed with isolated masses of granite. The points above the line of perpetual snow are all between lat 49° 30' and 56° N. There are many large lakes on the mountain terraces and valleys. The Altai covers, with its off-sets, a large part of the Russian govts Irkutsk, Yeniseisk, and Tomsk, and of West Mongolia; on the S W it is connected with the great tableland of Chinese Turkestan, and the Irisk, Ob, Yenisei, and Selenga rivers all rise within its limits. The principal roads over the Altai are—1 That from Irkutsk by Lake Baikal to Kuchkta, which is the chief route for the trade between Russia and China.—2 From Udmak, on the Selenga, to the mining district of Nerchinsk, on the Shilka, a tributary of the Amoor. The mountains in the western range consist chiefly of granite and primary rocks, with newer formations of porphyry intruded. The range of the Altai is remarkable as the source of auriferous sands, of which it appears to afford an unending supply. Mines of gold, silver, and lead, appear to have been worked by the ancient inhabitants, and have been reopened and wrought by the Russians. Sandstones, conglomerates, and chalk, rest on granite in the mountains surrounding Lake Baikal, and many parts of this range indicate volcanic agency. These mountains are rich in carnelian, onyx, topaz, amethyst, and other gems. The most productive mining district is E of Barnaul, many of its most important mines being near Krasnoyarsk. The mining district of Nerchinsk is less productive, yielding only 1-4th as much metal as that of Barnaul, a disproportion attributable to the scarcity of smelting materials.

These mountain regions are fitted for pasturage, though many of the valleys contain suitable for agriculture. The inhabitants named Tshades are now extinct, and have been succeeded by the present nomadic population.

AMAZON, MARASON, ORELLANA or SOLIMOS, the chief river of South America, and the largest in the world, whether regarded as to its volume, its length, or the extent of its basin. Is formed by the union of the Tunguragua and Ucayali; the former rising in Lake Lauricocha (Peru), in lat. 10° 30' S., lon. 76° 10' W. The head stream of the latter, the Apurimac, originating about lat. 16° S., lon. 72° W. Both rivers have a general course at first; the Tunguragua, near lat. 6° S., bends, and after receiving the Huallaga from the S., joins the Ucayali, about lat. 4° 25' S., lon. 73° 30' W. Here the stream has depth sufficient for any class of ships. Thenceforth the Amazon flows generally east, through the Brazilian territory, to the Atlantic, which it enters nearly under the equator, and between lon. 45° and 50° W., its estuary widening until it is 180 m. across. Taking the Apurimac as its source, its direct length is estimated at 1,769 m., and including its windings, nearly 4,000 m.; for great part of which (viz. from the ocean to Pongo de Manseriche, lon. 76° 50' W.), it is navigable and uninterrupted by any rapid or cataract. At least 20 rivers, navigable to near their sources, pour their waters into it, besides numerous less important streams. Chief tributaries the Napo, Putumayo, Yapura and Rio Negro, from the N.; the Yavari, Jutay, Jurua, Coary, Parana, Madeira, Tapajós, and Xingu, from the S. By the Casiquiare, a branch of the Rio Negro, the Amazon has a direct and remarkable connection with the Orinoco. The Amazon and its tributaries afford an immense inland navigation, estimated at 50,000 m.; and the extent of its basin has been computed at about 2,000,000 sq m. The depth of the river is great, in and current no bottom is found with 20 fathoms. The velocity of the current is pretty uniform, at the rate of 2½ miles an hour. Tides ascend this river for 400 m from the Atlantic—as far as Obidos, where the Amazon is still more than a mile in width—and near the full moon the rise of the tide occasions a formidable rush of water into the channel, sometimes bringing in several waves from 10 to 15 feet in height, this phenomenon, called the bore, is witnessed on a smaller scale in the Ganges, and in some European rivers. The upper part of the river, as far as the mouth of the Yavari, which forms the boundary line between Brazil and Peru, is called Marañon, thence to the mouth of the Rio Negro it is called Solimoes or Solimas, and from the Negro to its mouth Amazon. The tropical rains swell the river annually, to 40 and 50 feet above its ordinary level. The Marañon attains its greatest height in January, the Solimoes in February, the Amazon in the middle of March. In the lower part of its course, the Amazon abounds with islands, and in its estuary, the Marajo and Camana, of considerable extent. In 1843, a steam boat made a passage from Para up the river as far as the Negro. The estuary of the Amazon was discovered by Pinçon in 1600, in 1679, d Orellan sailed down the river from the Napo and it obtained the name of Amazon from his having reported that he had seen armed women on its shores.

AMERICA or THE NEW WORLD, is one of the grand divisions of the globe. Continental America extends from lat. 54° S. to 71° N., extreme length being 10,000 m. from Magellan to Behring Straits. The Tierra del Fuego islands reach 1° beyond its S. extremity into the Antarctic Ocean. Greenland has been explored to lat. 75° N., and is supposed to extend farther into the polar circle. Between the N. coast and lat. 80°, is supposed to be occupied by an archipelago of islands, and Greenland from E. to W. is intersected by arms of the sea, like the regions on the W. of Baffin Bay. Area 15,541,000 sq. m. Pop. 57,339,631. (?) America has no great deserts, no part of it is very far removed from the sea, the interior being penetrated by the Mississippi, Plata, and Amazon rivers. N. of the equator it is divided by the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea into two continents of nearly equal extent, connected by a narrow region, extending through 15° of lat., called Central America, the S. extremity of which (Isthmus of Darien or Panama) is only 28 m. across. The lakes of North America contain the greatest extent of fresh water in the world. The mountains are very extensive, reaching from S. to N., under the designations of Andes, Sierra Madre, Anahuac, and Rocky Mountains. America was discovered by Columbus in 1492, since which time a continuous stream of emigration has flowed in from Europe, and by far the greater proportion of the population is now of European descent. The Red Indians (natives) are peculiar, having the physical character of a distinct race. The tribes of the N. and S., though differing in civilization, and using various dialects of one primary language, seem to have had a common origin, and through their intercourse with Europeans and Negroes, are rapidly becoming extinct. From the high N. and S. latitudes of the country, it is remarkable for its extreme vicissitudes of climate. The products of every clime abound in its different regions, and in some tracts vegetation is most exuberant. It yields sugar, cotton, tobacco, coffee, cocoa, dyo-woods, mahogany, and medicinal barks. Minerals comprise gold, silver, iron, copper, tin, lead, sandstone, limestone, and marble. Fossil remains of gigantic animals have been found. Wild horses, originally imported from Europe. The bison, musk-ox, rein-deer, bears, puma, and jaguar are found. The inferior animal tribes are in great variety, and many of them are peculiar to this continent. The domestic animals are the llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña. The following table shows the different states in America and the West Indies, with their area and population estimated in 1858:—

[BRASIL, CANADA, RUSSIAN AMERICA, UNITED STATES, WEST INDIES.]

AMERICA (CENTRAL), is the long and narrow region, between lat. 7° and 21° 30' N, lon 78° and 94° W, connecting the continents of North and South America, and comprising, besides the Central American States, Yucatan, parts of Mexico and New Granada, the Mosquito coast, and British Honduras. In a more limited sense the term is applied to the following republics: between lat. 8° and 18° N, lon 81° 30' and 94° W, bounded on the E by the Caribbean Sea and New Granada, NW Yucatan and Chiapas, W and S by the Pacific

Area	Area in sq. m.	Population	Capital
Guatemala	49,800	470,450	Guatemala
El Salvador	9,344	204,000	San Salvador
Honduras	45,816	320,000	Tegucigalpa
Nicaragua	11,800	150,000	Managua
British Honduras	16,800	11,000	Belize
Total	174,566	9,200,000

The greatest length from S E to N W is about 900 m, breadth varying from 70 to 350 m, the most northern limit being Chetumal Bay, N of Belize, and its most S, Burica Point, in the entrance S of Costa Rica. To this succeeds the plain of Nicaragua, 170 m in length and the same in breadth, the Lake Nicaragua, which covers a considerable portion of the surface being on y 194 feet above the Pacific Ocean. The country to E of this plain is mountainous, some of the peaks being 7,000 to 8,000 feet in elevation. The table land of Guatemala extends from the Isthmus of Chignahuila to that of Chiriquete, in Mexico, and extends into the plain all of Yucatan. In some places this table land is 5,000 feet above the sea, it descends very rapidly to the Pacific, but more gradually towards Mexico and the Atlantic. It contains two volcanic mountains, upwards of 12,000 feet in elevation. The climate is hot and moist in the lowlands, where there are dense forests, but is milder and more salubrious on the elevated table lands. On the coast of the Caribbean Sea there are numerous earthquakes are very frequent, especially in the table lands and numerous volcanoes exist. Principal rivers, the Motagua, Rio Dulce, Rio Pocho, Chusco, Bluefield, San Juan all of which flow N or E. Principal lakes, Nicaragua and Leon, through which a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans has long been projected. (P. 1000) On both E and W shores there are many good ports. Below the elevation of 3,000 feet, in figo, cotton, sugar, and cocoa are the chief crops between 3,000 to 6,000 feet the cochineal plant is cultivated. Maize is raised but wheat only in the high table land in the N. In some parts the chocolate, a fruit yielding a great deal of nourishment, supplies in commerce the place of corn. Other products are coffee, tobacco, dragon's blood, mastic, various balsams and drugs, tamarinds, pepper, cassia, ginger, vanilla, mahogany, cedar, ligwood, and other woods for dyeing or building, with gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, and zinc. The country is rich in precious metals. Alcedo stated that from the mine of Triunfal (Costa Rica), as much wealth had been extracted as from that of Potosi in Peru. Horses, asses, goats, hogs, having been introduced by the Spaniards, are now numerous, herds of cattle are pastured in the grazing farms of Nicaragua, and flocks of sheep feed on the table land of Quetzaltenango, being reared almost wholly for their wool. Cattle and sheep breeding are, with agriculture, the main occupations of the population, but the production of coarse woollens, cotton cloths, caps, hats, earthenware, furniture, cabinet work employs a good many hands, and the Indian weavers make of different colours, which are used as carpets. Principal exports are indigo, cochineal, bullion, sugar, hides, dyewoods, hides, balsams, mahogany, and other timber, sugar, coffee, tortoise-shell and cattle. In 1913, the value amounted to $1,000,000. Imports consist of cotton, linens, silk, fabrics, hardware, cutlery, watches, trinkets, wine, oil, spices, and iron. In 1813 3,886 lbs of coffee, 12,345 lbs of cocoa and 46 tons of rice were exported in the exports of Central America to the United Kingdom from which the republic received cotton goods to the value of $1,000,000, and some other goods. The rest of the trade is chiefly with the U. S., West India islands, Spain and France. The population consists of aboriginal tribes, of Europeans, and mixed race. Several tribes live in an independent condition without intercourse with Europeans although those along the Mosquito shore consider themselves under the protection of the British. Each state has its own president, vice president, senate, and assembly of deputies who are chosen by electoral colleges. The cities and towns have each a municipal corporation presided over by a mayor. Spanish laws have been replaced by civil and criminal law on those of the U. S. The established religion is Roman Catholic. Aggregate public revenue of the States has not been ascertained, but the expenditure in most if not all, exceeds the income. Columbus discovered this region in 1492. In 1527 it was made a Spanish captaincy generalship and it belonged to Spain until 1821, when Guatemala first declared its independence. The several states subsequently formed a confederation, which was dissolved in 1839. Many ruins of ancient cities, temples, etc., have been discovered in this region and are supposed to be the architecture of the native population, previous to and after the Spanish conquest.

AMERICA (NORTH) extends northwards of lat 36° N and between lon 10° and 160° W. On its E side are Hudson and James Bays, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Bay of Fundy, Chesapeake, and Delaware, on its S the Gulf of Mexico, on its W the Gulf of California and Georgia, Cook Inlet, Bristol Bay, and Norton and Kotzebue Sounds. On the N the Arctic Ocean separates it from Melville and Bathurst islands, Victoria I and Boothia, the Baffin Bay and Davis Strait divide Coclum I from Greenland. Chief peninsula of North America, Labrador, Nova Scotia, Florida, and Old California. The mountains of North America are divided into several chains, of which the Alleghenian or Appalachian on the E, and the Rocky Mountains on the W, bound the great central region of North America, drained by the Mississippi and Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Kansas, Arkansas, Rio Bravo, etc. The E part of this region is fertile, and its centre is a vast prairie, but much of its W part is rocky and barren. N of this region the five great lakes, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, discharge their waters eastward by the river St. Lawrence into the Gulf of same name. Still farther N is the Boreal region occupying all the surface from Canada northwards to the coasts of the Arctic Ocean and Hudson Bay; from the Winnipeg, Manitoba, Wollaston, Hayes, Slave, Great Bear, and Athabasca lakes, and the Mackenzie, Athabasca, Great Slave, and Great Fish rivers, mostly flowing northward. The Colorado, Columbia, and Great Snake rivers, with the unexplored territory of Russian America, are W. of the Rocky Mountains, which rise much further inland from the Pacific than the Andes in South America. Around this continent are numerous islands, including Newfoundland, Prince Edward, Cape Breton, and the West Indian archipelago on the E., and several archipelagos lining the Russian and British coasts in the N.W.; the aggregate area of the North American islands being estimated at 180,000 square miles.

AMERICA (SOOTH) extends southward from lat. 12° 30' N., and from lon. 35° to 81° 30' W. Consisting mainly of three immense plains, respectively watered by the Amazon, Plata, and Orinoco rivers. The basins of the two former are enclosed by the Andes westward, and the mountains of Brazil on the E.; that of the last is bounded northward by a cordillera of the Andes, and S. by the sierras dividing Colombia from Brazil. All the great rivers of this continent discharge their waters into the Atlantic, except the Rio Magdalena, which, with its affluents, flows between the Cordilleras of the Andes northward to the Caribbean Sea. Next to these large rivers and their tributaries, are the Tocantins, Parana-hyba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Rio Grande do Sul, and Rio Negro of Patagonia, all of which enter the Atlantic. Chief inlets, the Gulfs of St George and St Matthias in Patagonia; and in Colombia the Gulf of Guayaquil and the Lake of Maracaybo, united by a strait to the Caribbean Sea. Lake Titicaca is the only inland lake of consequence; it is much inferior in size to Lake Nicaragua in Central America. Sierra del Fuego, the largest ial. belonging to South America, is at the S. extremity of Patagonia, the W. coast of which country, with a part of that of Chile, is lined by numerous islands, interspersed with some of the best harbours in the Pacific. In 1848, the produce of gold and silver was estimated at $600,000. a year.—Russian America comprehends the N.W. coasts from lat. 55° to 70° N., lon. 141° to 165° W.—British America is bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, N.W. by Russian America, E. by the United States, and E. by the Atlantic. It comprises British Columbia and Vancouver Island, the Hudson Bay Territory, including Labrador, Canada, and the Lower Provinces (embracing New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland).—United States extend from the British possessions in the N., to the Gulf of Mexico S., and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans. The Republic of Mexico extends from lat. 16° to 28° N.—Central America includes the Republics of Guatemala, San Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica.—South America comprehends the Republics of the Grenadian Confeder., Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and Chile. Between these states and the Atlantic lie the United Provinces of La Plata. The empire of Brazil lies to the E., watered by the Atlantic, adjoining which is the state of Paraguay. Uruguay or Bayda Oriental, lies immediately to the E. of Brazil, and Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego form the southern limits of the continent.—Islands on the N.E. coast, between lat. 1° and 2° S., comprises the British possessions of Demerara, Guayana, Surinam, the French possession of Cayenne, and Dutch colony of Surinam.—The West India Islands in the Columbian Archipelago, consist of the Bahama Islands, Great Antilles, including Cuba, Jamaica, St Domingo, and Porto Rico. occupying the E. part of Further India, between lat. 3° and 25° N., lon. 105° and 109° E.; comprising Cochín-China, Tonquin, and a part of Cambodia; and having N. the Chinese provs. Quáng-tsi and Yun-nan, W. the indep. Laos and Siamese territories, and S. and E. the China Sea and Gulf of Tonquin. Area estimated about 140,000 sq. m. (?); and population at 6,000,000 (?), of whom 500,000 were supposed to be Mohammedans. Surface generally fertile, rising gradually from the sea to the great mountain chain separating Cochín-China from Cambodia. Tonquin and Cambodia are alluvial plains of great fertility. The whole empire is well watered, and the country in many parts covered with dense forests, or carefully cultivated. Chief rivers the Menam-kong, forming the boundary on the side of Siam, and the rivers of Tonquin, Saigon, and Hné. Climate healthy, the heat being tempered by sea breezes. Inhabitants similar in race to the Chinese, with an intermixture of Siamese, Malays, and Mol, or dark negro race. Coasts generally bold, and abound with some of the best harbours in the world. Products rice, sugar, cinnamon, cardamoms, pepper, and other spices; indigo, dye-woods, iron-wood, teak, and other timber; varnish, gums, an inferior tea, bamboos, ivory, silk, copper, iron, the precious metals, edible birds' nests and pearls, form the principal exports. Imports manu. silks, porcelain, drugs, fine teas, and household utensils from China (but the Chinese trade with Anam is much less than with Siam); spices, sandal wood, and tin from the Malay peninsula; opium from India; cottons from Canton and Singapore, and a few British coarse woollens, with serges, camlets, iron, and arms from Europe. The king is said to monopolize the legal trade, in which five square-rigged ships are employed, in voyages to Canton, Batavia, and British India. In 1844, the imports from Anam, at Singapore, amounted in value to 177,606 dollars, and the exports thither to 229,413 dollars. Chief cities and seats of trade, Hné, the cap., Ke-cho (Tonquin), Saigon, and Faifo. The government is an hereditary military despotism; the central administration is under six mandarins, heads of bureaux; and the provinces are each under a mandarin of the first or military class. Standing army was, some years since, between 40,000 and 50,000 men, besides the royal guards and 800 elephants. Navy includes about 200 gun-boats, 100 galleys, and 500 smaller vessels—a large force; but the people have a maritime taste, and excel most Asiatics in ship-building. The popular religion is Buddhism. Before the French revolution, the government of Louis xvi. made great endeavours to establish French ascendancy in Anam; and by the efforts of the French residents, several of the cities were fortified in the European fashion, and European policy was introduced into the government; but these incipient reforms have since become obsolete; a more recent attempt, on the part of the French, to gain an ascendancy, having also failed. The emperor sends presents, at stated periods, to the court of Peking, which affects to consider Anam tributary to China, and invests its successive rulers with their sovereignty.

The port, one of the best and most frequented in Italy, is defended by several forts, and enclosed by two moles, on one of which is an arch erected to the Emperor Trajan A.D. 113. On the new mole is the arch of Benedict xiv., and a lighthouse at its extremity.

In 1798, Ancona was taken and occupied by the French, and in 1799 General Mounier was besieged here. Was again taken by the French in 1801, and restored to the Pope in 1802. After this it was incorporated with the kingdom of Italy till 1814, when it was restored to the Papal dominions. A detachment of French troops held its citadel from 1832 to 1838. Steamers leave Ancona for Corfu, Patras, Athens, Smyrna, and Constantinople. Manufactures of silk stockings, leather, paper, wax, candles, and verdigris. Principal exports corn, hemp, bacon, sulphur, and tallow; chief imports colonial goods, drugs, and metals. In 1842, 1,532 vessels, aggregate burden 109,813 tons, entered the port with cargoes valued at 1,024,000*l.*, of which 240,500*l.* in value were British commodities, chiefly unmanufactured goods and dried fish.

ANDALUCIA, an ancient division of the South of Spain, bounded N. by Estramadura and New Castile, E. by Murcia and the Mediterranean, S. by the Atlantic, and W. by Portugal. Is now divided into the following provinces, which are named from their chief towns, Almería, Granada, Jaén, Málaga, Cadix, Córdoba, Huelva, and Sevilla.

Is traversed by the Sierra Morena and Nevada; the climate on the coasts is extremely warm. Chief minerals are lead, copper, iron, and mercury. Is very fertile in grain, wine, olives, figs, sugar, and cotton, and furnishes a considerable quantity of silk and cochineal. On its pasture is raised a celebrated breed of horses, and sheep which yield fine wool. The manuf., formerly important, have greatly declined. The Vandals were established in this country during several years, in the 5th century. After the dismemberment of the empire of the Caliphs in 1030, Andalusia formed the kingdoms of Cordova, Sevilla, Jaén, Almería, Málaga, and Granada, which were all successively conquered by the kings of Castile. The kings of Granada existed till 1492.

ANDES (Span. Cordillera de los Andes), the great mountain system of South America, extending through 65° of lat., along its W. coast from Cape Horn to the Isthmus of Panama, with a breadth of from 40 to 400 m., forming along the highest part a length of 4,360 m., and covering with its chains, plateaus, and declivities, nearly a sixth part of that continent. From its S. extremity the main chain runs along the W. shore of Tierra del Fuego, and consists of rocky summits, rising in many places to 2,000 or 3,000 feet, the culminating point of this portion (Mount Sarmiento), being 5,910 feet above the sea. The Patagonian Andes, which succeed those of the S. insular dist., run directly N. as far as lat. 42° S., flanked by rocky and mountainous islands in the Pacific, that seem to have been disunited from the mainland by volcanic agency. The extreme height of the Andes in this division is 8,030 feet. The Andes of Chile, which follow, extend from lat. 42° to lat. 21° S., and some of their summits reach the height of 23,000 feet; the chain is here about 80 m. across, and toward the ocean is flanked by extensive plains from 1,200 to 2,000 feet above the sea level, from which the mountains rise with a steep acclivity. There are several passes across this ridge, the most important is that of the great line of road between the city of Buenos Ayres and Valparaiso on the Pacific Ocean. The Bolivian Andes, which form the central and most elevated portion of the system, extend N. from lat. 21° to 14° S., presenting one immense mass of rocks, extending over 7° of lat., and in breadth from 200 to 250 m., the more elevated summits of which rise on the E. and W. edges of the plateau, from 13,000 to 23,000 feet. In this section, also the chain (hitherto forming a single undivided ridge) separates, about lat. 19° S., into two great longitudinal ridges, the E. called the Cordillera Real, and the W. the Cordillera of the coast. These run parallel to each other, and bound the table-land of Desaguadero, elevated 18,000 feet above the sea, extending 500 m. in length, and from 30 to 60 m. in breadth along the top of the Andes, and enclosing the Lake of Titicaca. N. of this, the Cordilleras reunite in the mountain knot of Cuzco. The Peruvian Andes, separated from the Pacific by a sandy desert, 1,500 m. broad, extend from lat. 14° to 6° S., and detach two eastern offshoots, one of which runs N.W. between the Marañon and the Huallaga rivers, and the other between the Huallaga and the Ucayali. The main range, termed the Cordillera of the Coast, runs W.N.W. in a direction parallel to, and about 50 m. distant from the Pacific. The Andes of Quito commence at lat. 5° S., and run nearly due N. to the table-land of Quito, which is 200 m. long, 30 m. broad, elevated 8,000 feet above the sea, and surrounded by the most magnificent series of volcanoes in the world. About lat. 1° N. is the mountain knot of los Patates, containing several active volcanoes. On the E. side, lat. 2° N., is the mountain knot of Parana, from which extend three separate chains.—I. That of Suma Paz, going N.E. from lat. 2° to lat. 9° N., and rising to an elevation of 9,000 feet.

—II. The chain of Quindío, N.N.E. between the knots of Parana and Antioquia; and III. the chain of Choco, between the rivers Cauca and Atrato. A low ridge extends on the W. of the Atrato, and gradually sinks as it approaches the Isthmus of Panama. The Andes are composed partly of granite, gneiss, mica, and clay slate, but chiefly of greenstone, porphyry, and basalt, with limestone, red sandstone, and conglomerate. Salt and gypsum are also found, and seams of coal at a great elevation. The topaz, amethyst, and other gems are abundant. Volcanoes are numerous in the Chilean Andes, where there are no less than nineteen in a state of activity; and the mountains of Ecuador consist almost altogether of volcanic summits, either now or formerly in active ignition. Of these, the most dreaded is Cotopaxi. In some of its eruptive flames rise 3,000 feet above the edge of its crater, and the sound of its explosions is heard at a distance of 550 m. Its form is most regular and beautiful; the summit forming a perfect cone, covered with an enormous bed of snow. Earthquakes generally accompany the volcanic eruptions, and are felt over all the adjacent continent. No portion of the globe is subject to such frequent and destructive earthquakes as the counties encompassed within the range of the Andes and those lying between them and the Pacific Ocean. The cities and towns of Bogotá, Quito, Riobamba, Callao, Copiapo, Valparaiso, and Concepcion, have all at different times been more or less devastated by their agency. The Andes are celebrated for their mineral riches,—producing gold and silver in large quantities, with platinum, mercury, copper, lead, tin, and iron. The limit of perpetual snow in the Andes reaches the height of 18,300 feet in the W. Cordillera of Chile; near the equator it is 15,000 feet, and in the Bolivian Andes (lat. 21° S.), 17,000 feet above the sea. The potato is cultivated in the Andes at an elevation of 9,800 to 13,000 feet. Wheat grows luxuriantly at a height of 10,000 feet, and oats ripen in the vicinity of Lake Titicaca, at an elevation of 12,795 feet. Glaciers are numerous in Tierra del Fuego, and on the W. coast of Patagonia. The following are the principal summits and passes of the Andes, arranged from S. to N., with elevations in English feet.

Ariège, and the Spanish prov. of Lerida, extending from lat. 42° 22' to 42° 48' N., and from lon. 1° 25' to 1° 55' E., surrounded by high mountains, on which the snow lies for six months in the year. Climate is cold, but healthy. Soil unproductive in grain, but contains many rich mines of iron and one of lead. The valley is divided into six pas, or communes, and contains, besides the cap., thirty-four hamlets. The government, a mixture of monarchy and democracy, is vested in twenty-four consuls, elected by the whole pop. Its constitution was, till 1848, subject to the mutual sovereignty of the King of the French and the Bishop of Urgel, and under the protection of the Queen of Spain. The inhabitants, mostly shepherds, speak the Catalan language. They are all Roman Catholics, and public instruction is in the lowest state. Industry confined to three iron forges, and a small quantity of coarse cloth. Chief commerce, export of iron to Spain, and skins and wool to France. The principal necessities of life are imported from Spain, and the republic carries on an extensive contraband trade between the two states. The pop. of the valley, which has been annually increasing, was in 1845 estimated from 5,000 to 6,000. The independence of this little state dates from Charlemagne, in 790.

APENNINES (Ital. Appennino), Apenninus Mons, a long chain of mountains which detaches itself from the Maritime Alps, in about lon. 9° E., having a general direction first from W. to E., nearly parallel with the Pennine and Lepontine Alps, from which it is separated by the valley of the Po. In lon. 12° E. the chain turns toward the S., and traverses the Italian peninsula throughout its entire length to the Strait of Messina, separating near the S. extremity, so as to embrace the Gulf of Tarentum. The principal branch traverses the kingdom of Naples, separating the waters which flow to the Mediterranean from those which fall into the Adriatic and the Ionian Seas.

The entire length of the chain is about 800 m. The Apennines often present rounded tops and a uniform crest, whence branches descend to the coasts, between which valleys, such as that at the mouth of the Tiber, open into extensive plains. The S. slope of that part of the chain which bounds the Gulf of Genoa, is composed of escarpments which rise abruptly from the sea. Among the detached portions of the Apennines are the mountains of Piemonte in Tuscany, Monte Albano near Rome, and Monte Faurus near Naples. M. Brugniere proposes to distinguish the mountains in Sicily by the name of the Insular Apennines. None of the summits attain the limit of perpetual snow, although snow lies on Monte Corno during nine months in the year. The culminating point of the Apennines, the Monte Corno or Gran Sasso d'Italia, between Abruzzo Ultra I and II, is 10,266 feet above the sea. The other principal summits are Monte Cimone, in the North Apennines, 6,975 feet, and Monte Amaro, summit of the Monte Majella in the South Apennines, 9,150 feet, but the chain in general is of lower elevation. The S.W. part of the chain is a vast volcanic region comprising Vesuvius, the only active volcano on the continent of Europe, and many thermal springs. On the N. is the volcanic mass of Vulture near Melfi. The constitution of the chain is chiefly calcareous, primary rocks are found only at the two extremities, in Piedmont and Calabria. Is poor in metals; iron occurs in small quantities, and extensive saliferous deposits occur near Cosenza; the celebrated marble of Carrara, Serravezza, and Sienna, constitutes the chief riches of the Apennines. Below 3,200 feet in elevation, the flanks of the principal chain are covered with a varied vegetation, of which the orange, citron, olive, and palm form the lower zone; but forests are rare in the Apennines. Above 3,200 feet the mountains are generally arid and devoid of vegetation.

ARABGIR, a thriving town of Asiatic Turkey, pash. Siras, cap. dist., near the Euphrates, and on the route between Trebizond and Aleppo, 185 m. S.S.W. Trebizond. Enclosed by a forest of fruit-trees, and reputed to have 6,000 houses, 4,800 being occupied by Mohammedans, and 1,200 by Armenians. The latter are mostly engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods from British yarn. In 1836, they had nearly 1,000 looms at work.

ARABIA (Arabistia of the Turks), the most westerly of the three great peninsulas of South Asia, between lat. 12° 40' and 34° N., lon. 32° 30' and 60° E. Bounded N. by Turkey in Asia, E. by the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman, S. by the Gulf of Oman and the Indian Ocean, and W. by the Red Sea. On the N.E. it is connected with Egypt by the Isthmus of Suez, and is divided in two parts by the Tropic of Cancer. Length from N. to S. about 1,600 m.; average breadth 800 m.; its area would therefore be 1,300,000 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 8,000,000. (?) Ptolemy subdivided the country into Arabia Petraea (the stony), Arabia Felix (Araby the blest), and Arabia Deserta; the first comprising its N.W. portion, with the peninsula of Sinai between the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah; the second, the territory along the W. and S. coasts; and the last,

all the rest of its extent; but this partition is unknown to the Arabians, and to Arab geographers. Its native subdivisions are the Behr-el-Tow-Sud (Desert of Mount Sinai), in the N.W.; the Hedjaz (Land of Pilgrimage), Tekama, and Yemen, along the Red Sea; Hadramaut, skirting the Indian Ocean; Oman (comprising the Muscat dominions), at its E. extremity; El-Hassa-Lachar or Bahrein, on the Persian Gulf; and lastly, Nedjed, comprising all the centre of the peninsula. The great desert zone, which stretches through Africa and Asia, consisting of the Sahara, a large part of Egypt and of Persia, Beloochistan, W. Afghanistan, N.W. India, most part of Chinese Turkestan and Mongolia, comprises also the greater part of Arabia, on which account much of the country is unknown. Its centre, in so far as explored by Europeans, is found to be a table-land, attaining in some places an elevation of 8,000 feet, sloping N.E. from a mountain chain prolonged from the Syrian Lebanon down to the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb, whence another chain extends N.E. parallel with the ocean as far as Oman. Granite, flanked by limestone, forms the base of these mountains, which are in general from 3,000 to 4,000 feet high, but the peak of Jebelokkdar, in Oman, is 6,000 feet in elevation. All N. from Hedjaz to the Euphrates, is a continuous plain of moving sands, and a similar region occupies most of the S. half of the peninsula; mountain ranges in various directions traverse the central plateau, and the S.E. coast is lined by mountains of 5,000 feet in elevation; the shores are generally bare and uninhabited, and a deficiency of water is almost universal; but wherever a small river irrigates the soil, there is a most luxuriant vegetation. The climate is the driest in the world; the dry season is prolonged during the entire year in the level parts; and the rainy season, which in general lasts from the middle of June to the end of September, and in Oman from November to the middle of February, occurs only in December and January in the northern deserts. The heat is excessive in the plains, but temperate in the mountainous regions of Yemen and Hadramaut, and the winters are rigorous in the elevated regions of Nedjed. The Simoom or Samiel, the hot wind of the desert, blows from the interior towards the coast in all directions. Vegetable products comprise maize, wheat, barley, millet, indigo, tobacco, the finest coffee, cotton, sugar, spices, tamarinds, dates, and numerous other fruits, balm, acacia, and various gums, resins, and drugs. Some valuable woods are produced, but Arabia has no forest, properly so called. The horse, which has been carefully bred here for several thousand years, forms an important branch of traffic. The wild ass of the desert is renowned for size and strength. The camel is the principal beast of burden, and the breed of Oman is celebrated for its beauty and fleetness; oxen, sheep, goats, and buffaloes are the other domestic animals. Mineral products are little known, but comprise the onyx, emerald, basalt, blue alabaster, iron, and silver. The inhabitants settled around the coast appear to have a distinct origin from the Bedwins or true Arabs, who are the traditionally reputed descendants of Ishmael, and wander with their flocks and herds, dwelling in tents, and subsisting partly by plunder. The Wahabees, who form a distinct sect of Mohammedans, occupy the interior of the country, having subjected a great portion of it to their dominion at the commencement of the present century. Agricultural processes are rude, and manifest a lower redder than in any other semi-civilized country. The Beduin women weave hair tent covers, and bags; and coarse linen and wollen fabrics, rude matchlocks, lance heads, and other arms, copper and tinued vessels, are made on the W. and S. coasts, mostly by foreigners. In Oman, silk and cotton turbans, sashes, wollen and hair cloaks, canvases, arms, earthen jars, and gunpowder, are made; but most other manufactured goods are obtained from abroad, in return for the native produce. The trade of Arabia is considerable, and large quantities of merchandises are brought by caravans and by sea from the surrounding countries, partly for internal consumption, and partly for distribution among the numerous pilgrims and merchants who resort to the holy cities of Mecca and Medina. Mocha and Lohela are centres of a large coffee trade. Muscat has lately risen to eminence as an entrepôt for the trade with India and the Persian Gulf, and dows or ships of a superior kind are built there, which occasionally perform voyages to India. Jiddah or Djidda, the port of Mecca, is the other principal commercial town. A part of Arabia is under Egyptian rule: other parts compose the imamat of Muscat and Yemen, the first-named of which is a dominion of some consequence. The rest of the country is shared among an uncertain number of petty states. The gov. of the Beduins is strictly patriarchal in each of the numerous tribes. The religion of the country is Islamism, which had its origin here towards the end of the 6th century, replacing the Sabæism and Judæism which had previously been the prevailing forms of worship. The Arabic language, called vulgar, to distinguish it from that of the Koran, is used over all the North of Africa, and extends even to the S.E. of Asia, being among the most widely spread on the globe. The literary Arabic is still used in the library of all Mussulmans. It was long the language of the sciences, arts, and civilization, and its literature is the richest of all the anc. nations of the East. Literature and the arts are now almost unknown to the present semi-barbarous race of inhabitants.

ARACAN or ARACAN, a British prov. of Farther India, presid Bengal, extending along the E. side of the Bay of Bengal, between lat 18° and 21° 38' N., lon. 92° and 94° E., having E. the Burmese dom., from which it is separated by a high mountain range, and N. the British dist., Chittagong. Area estim. at 16,500 sq. m. Pop. (1851) 521,000. Coast swampy and unhealthy, but there are many good harbours and large islands. Chief rivers, the Aracan, Myoo, Aeng, and Sandoway, all in some degree navigable. Forests extensive. Chief products, rice, indigo, cotton, timber, salt, all buffalo hides and horns, ivory, tobacco, silk, and fruits exported to Bengal and Chittagong, in return for betel and British and Indian manufactures. Iron, coal, and naphtha are found along the coast. Aracana is subdivided into the dists. of Akyah, Ramree, Aeng, and Sandoway; chief town, Akyah; chief military station, Kyauk Phyo. This prov. was conquered by the Burmese in 1788, and taken from them by the British in 1824. — Aracana, the former cap. of the prov., is situated on a branch of the Kaladyne river, 50 m. from the Bay of Bengal. Lat. 20° 42' N., lon. 93° 24' E. It is enclosed by low hills and marshes, and has fortifications, an ancient palace, and numerous pagodas. A large trade is carried on in British manufactures. It is very unhealthy, and is fast losing its former importance. Pop. (1855) 8,000. — Aracana or Kaladyne River, rises in the Burmese dom. lat. 23° N., lon. 94° E. After a S. course of 200 m., enters the Bay of Bengal in Aracan, 15 m. N.E. Akyah. Is navigable in its latter part for vessels of 250 tons.

ARAFURA (SEA OF), N. of Australia. [PAPUA.]

ARAGON (Kingdom of), one of the provs. into which, previous to 1833, the Spanish monarchy was divided, is situated at the N.E. of the peninsula between lat. 40° 2' and 42° 51' N., lon. 2° 10' W., and 1° 43' E., bounded N. by the Pyrénées, E. by Catalonia and part of Valencia, S. Valencia and part of Castilla Nueva, W. Navarra and Castilla. Pop. (1849) 847,105, cap. Zaragoza. Is divided into the provs. of Huesca, Teruel, and Zaragoza. This territory is covered with elevated mountains, the highest of which is Mont Perdido, 11,274 feet. Climate cold in the mountains, mild and even warm in the valleys. The soil is fertile, but agriculture is defective. Products, wheat, barley, maize, wine, and olives; the mountains furnish excellent pasture, wool is of first quality, and minerals abundant. The kingdom of Aragon was founded in 1034, and united to the crown of Castile by Ferdinand the Catholic, who married Isabella in 1474.

ARAGON (RIVER), a river of Spain, which rises in the Pyrénées, and, flowing through Navarre, joins the Ebro opposite Alfaro, after a S.W. course of 80 m. Chief aff. the Arga. On it are the towns Verdun and Sanguesa.

ARAGONA, a town of Sicily, intend. and 7½ m. N.N.E. Girgenti. Pop. 6,000. Has an old castle, with fine paintings and antiquities. Near it is the curious mud volcano of Maccaluba.

ARAGUAYA, a large river of Brazil, rises in the Serra Seada, with many branches. Lat. 18° 10' S., lon. 51° 30' W.; flows northward between the provs. Goyaz and Matto Grosso, and joins the Tocantins at San Joao, after a total course of at least 1,600 m., about the middle of which it separates into 2 arms, enclosing the Isl. Santa Anna, 200 m. in length. The E. branch is called the Furo.

ARAKHOVA, a vill. of Greece, gov. Kavala, on the S. declivity of Mount Parassus, 16 m. W.N.W. Lebadea.

ARAL, an extensive lake or inland sea of Asia, Independent Tartary, between lat. 43° 42' and 46° 44' N., lon. 58° 18' and 61° 46' E. It is the largest inland sea of the eastern hemisphere, except the Caspian, from which it is separated on the E. by the desert plateau of Ust-Urt; length

N. to S., about 266 m.; breadth E. to W., about 120 m. At its S.W. end it has a prolongation called Lake Lantian, 100 m. long and about 20 m. broad, whence issues the river Landan. The Aral is shallow; it contains 2 islands near its S. end. Water slightly bitter and saltish. The rivers Sir or Jaxartes, and the Amu-daria, enter it on the E. This sea has no apparent outlet, and, from excess of evaporation, it is supposed to be decreasing in size. It is estimated to be on the same level as the Caspian, with which at one time it was probably connected. Since 1852, the Russians have erected 2 fortresses near the mouth of the Syr-Daria, and stationed a small fleet at the large island Nikolai.

ARAMEGO, an anc. town of the Sardinian States, Piedmont, prov. Asdi. Pop. 1,080.

ARCTIC OCEAN or NORTHERN ICE SEA, is that part of the Ocean which extends from the Arctic circle, lat. 66° 30' N., to the North Pole; it bathes the whole of the N. coasts of Europe, Asia, and America, and communicates on the N.W. of Europe with the Atlantic; on the N.E. of Asia with the Pacific by Behring Strait. It forms the White Sea in Europe, and the Gulfs of Kara, Ob, and Yenisei, in Siberia; in North America, where it takes the name of the Polar Sea, it forms Baffin Bay. The principal rivers which flow into the Arctic Ocean are the Ob, Yenisei, Anbara, Lena, and Kolima, in Asia, and the Mackenzie, in America. Its chief isl. are Spitzbergen, the Loffoden isls., Kalgouf, Waigatz, and Nova Zembla, in Europe; the isls. of New Siberia in Asia; and the Polar Archipelago, in America. During winter ice extends in every direction round the pole, covering a space of from 3,000 to 4,000 m. in diameter; and even during the four months of summer, the surface of this sea is at the freezing-point. Icebergs and fields of ice are continually drifting southwards into the Atlantic—the former sometimes extending to 100 m. in length, and from 25 to 30 m. in diameter. The coast-line of the Arctic Ocean in Asia and Europe, has been pretty well ascertained by English and Russian navigators. Scoresby, in 1822, traced the E. coast of Greenland as far as lat. 79° N.; and Cook, Hearne, Parry, Franklin, Back, Ross, Lyon, Richardson, Dease, Simpson, and Beechey, have made known most part of the coast-line in North America. Sir E. Parry, in 1827, penetrated as far N. as lat. 82° 45' 15"; and great additions, including the Queen Channel, Grinnell or Albert Land, Baring Island, and the discovery of the N.W. Passage, have been made to our knowledge of the Frozen Regions, by the expeditions in search of Sir J. Franklin, between the years 1830 and 1864. The Arctic Ocean is remarkable for the abundance of its animals, and it is the principal field of the Northern whale-fishery.

ASHMANHAM, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, lands descend to the lowlands bordering on the ocean. On the mountain ranges N. of the table land, two great rivers take their rise—the Irish, the Tarsus, the Lena, and the Amur, draining a surface of country more extensive than that of Europe. Two great rivers take their rise in the eastern range, the Hoang-Ho and the Yangtze-Kiang, which, flowing through China, discharge their waters into the Pacific Ocean. The principal rivers of South Asia are the Cambodia, Irrawaddy, and Menam; the Brahmaputra, Ganges, and Indus, taking their rise in the Himalayan mtns., and traversing by diverging routes the country known as India within the Ganges. The Western Plateau is much smaller in extent than the eastern, but being more contiguous to Europe, assimilates more in its character to that continent. The high table-land of Iran extends from the Upper Indus through W. Asia to the shores of the Grecian Archipelago. Persia forms its centre; to the W. are the Turkish dominions, and E. Afghanistan. The centre is intersected by several extensive mountain ridges, through which are some important passes from the Highlands of Persia to the coast. Westward of Persia, the table-land becomes more mountainous in the countries of Kurdistan, Azerbaijan and Armenia; here the rivers Euphrates and Tigris have their source, which, flowing through Mesopotamia and into Babylonia, enter the Persian Gulf by one channel. The peninsula of Arabia forms a continuation of the Highlands of W. Asia. The Lowlands of Asia may be divided into, 1. Chinese Lowlands, on the E., commencing at Peking, and extending nearly to the tropic, enjoying a temperate climate and fertile soil. 2. Indo-Chinese, comprehending Cambodia and Siam, a well-watered and good rice country. 3. Hindustan, bounded by the Ganges and Indus, forming a great triangle. 4. Syria and Arabia, the southern part dry and desert, the northern watered by the Euphrates and Tigris. 5. Northern Siberian, in extent more than half all the others, stretching along the Polar Sea from the Ural mtns. to the Pacific Ocean, a cold and sterile region. 6. Bucharia, on the Caspian Sea and Lake Aral, with a gravelly soil, ill-watered, covered with grass, without trees, and with only occasional patches of fertile land. The mineral products of Asia are numerous, and have been known from remote antiquity. Precious stones are abundant. Amethysts, topazes, and rock-crystal are found in the Altai, Himalaya, and Ural mtns.; carnelians, and agates in W. India; beryl and lapis lazuli near Lake Balkh; sapphires and rubies, Ceylon isl.; diamonds in Deccan, Borneo, and Ural mtns. Volcanic products are found near Mount Taurus, in Armenia, W. Anatolia, and in Japan and Sunda isl.; steatite, asbestos, and kaolin or fine porcelain clay, in China and Japan; talc in Siberia; coals in Hindustan and China; rock-salt in the Ural mtns., N. China, and Turkey; gold or gold-dust in various localities. In 1843, the mines of Siberia produced 62,367 lbs. troy of gold, estimated value, 2,750,000. Mercury in China and Japan. Copper and iron in Ural mtns., and lead in Da-uria, China, Armenia. Fossil shells are found in great quantities at an elevation of 15,000 to 18,000 feet in Tibet, mammalian remains in the lower Himalaya, and the alluvial soil of Siberia, is full of bones of extinct quadrupeds. The vegetation of Asia varies with its different regions. N. of lat. 50° scarcely any vegetable products are seen except birches, maples, and lichens. In S. Siberia, and indeed as far S. as the chain of the Himalaya and Himadoe-Koosh, the vegetation in a great measure resembles that of N. and Central Europe, though all the great table-land of E. Asia is remarkably bare of timber. Glaciers and glaciers are products peculiar to this region. In the cultivated plains of Bokhara and Cabool, grapes, melons, pears, figs, and other fruits common in Europe, grow to such perfection that they are exported in considerable quantities to Persia and Hindustan. N. of the Caucasus, the country is thinly covered with vegetable products, and those are of inferior quality; but immediately S. of that chain, the cedar, cypress, juniper, oak, and the fruits common to S. Europe flourish luxuriantly; and rice, cotton, indigo, sugar, tobacco, dates, are among the products of the fruitful plains of Turkey and Persia. The region of Asia S. and E. of the Himalaya, comprising the Indian peninsula, with China proper and the Asiatic Archipelago, is unrivalled for the number and richness of its vegetable products. These include the plantain, banyan, ebony, iron, rose and sandal-wood trees; bamboos, gums, varnishes, and dye-woods in immense variety; with the betel, bread-fruit and banana, guava, mango, mangosteen, and a multitude of other fruits; sugar, opium, cotton, indigo, and numerous valuable articles of culture. The teak-tree, tea, sago, camphor, cloves, mace, and nutmegs, are peculiar to this part of the globe. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 10,000 feet in the Himalaya mountains. The zoology of the N. of Asia partakes of the character of that of N. Europe. In the central and southern countries are found the elephant, rhinoceros, Bengal tiger, and many other formidable animals, with the camel, auroch, yak, musk-deer, argal, Tibet goat; and it is believed that all the domestic animals of Europe (the sheep perhaps excepted) have been originally derived from Asia. There seems to be this marked distinction between the ox, horse, ass, goat, hog, and other mammal tribes which are natives of Asia, and those which are indigenous in Africa or America,—that the former alone are capable of propagation and domestication in every climate. Asia has comparatively a less variety of birds and reptiles than of quadrupeds, but the cassowary, bustard, pheasant, domestic fowl, and a variety of other gallinaceous birds are abundant, and among reptiles, the Indian python, the cobra-de-capello or spectacle snake, with the gaviol or crocodile of the Ganges, are formidable in the highest degree.

Asia is considered the cradle of the human race, from whence the various nations and tribes have issued to people the other parts of the world. The number of foreigners who have migrated to and settled in Asia, is small compared to those who have left it. The races inhabiting Asia may be divided into 1. The Semitic, including Syrians, Jews, Arabs, and the descendants of the ancient Chaldeans or Arameans. 2. The Persian Kurds, Ossetes, Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians. 3. The Turks, forming a numerous race of central Asia. 4. The Mongoloids, N. Asia. 5. The Mongols, Burials, Kalmucks, Tamboos, and other tribes in N.E. Asia. 6. The Japanese, Chinese. 7. The Malays, inhabiting Malaysia and the islands of the Eastern Archipelago. The political divisions of Asia, include six empires, China, Russia, Britain, Persia, Turkey, Arabia. The British possessions are chiefly in India, or the peninsula within the Ganges. The Portuguese, whose settlements were formerly numerous, have preserved only Goa, Damann, Macao, and a few others. The French possess Pondicherry, a settlement on the coast of Malabar, and two or three stock. The Dutch occupy Java, Sumatra, the Moluccas, &c.

The following table affords a general estimate, at least on the data will permit, of its extent and population:—

ASIA MINOR, a cluster of low and thickly wooded islands in the Asiatic Archipelago, E. of Gilo. Lat. 1° N., lon. 151° 17' E.

ASIA, a town of Northern Italy, deleg. Vicenza, sup. of the dist. termed the "Seven Communes," inhabited by a race of German descent, 23 m. N. Vicenza. Pop. of the dist., 25,500; of the town, 4,870. Is celebrated for the manufacture of straw hats and all sorts of carpenter's work.

ASIA MINOR or ANATOLIA, forms the western peninsula of Asia, extending between lat. 36° and 40° N., lon. 29° 4' and 31° 35' E., having E. Armenia and Cappadocia, S. Syria and the Mediterranean, W. the Aegean Sea, and N. the Sea of Marmora and Black Sea. Area estimated at 1,000,000 sq. m. Pop. (1844) 10,700,000. The country presents in its conformation a mountainous mass, with a mean elev. of about 3,200 feet. It is depressed almost in its centre into a plateau, averaging 2,000 feet above the sea. This plateau, with local modifications, forms a long broad band, which cuts the peninsula from N.W. to S.E., and between the parallels of 40° and 37° 15'. It contains the greater portion of plain surface in the peninsula, all the remainder being an agglomeration of mountains, the chains of which follow two principal courses, viz. from N.W. to S.E., and N.E. to S.W. From these great lines numerous chains, forming lateral ramifications, run across the peninsula in all directions. The most elev. chains, as the Taurus range, 9,800 feet, and Mount Argæus, 13,000 feet in elev., are concentrated in the S. part of the country; while near the N. coast are the chains of Olympus (5,332 feet), Ida, and Gargarus. From the peculiar formation of the country it presents the greatest contrasts in its climatology and vegetation. Asia-Taurus is composed of two parallel ramparts, elev. of the highest, Argh Tag, 13,000 feet. N. of these is the Euxine or Læzan range. Shores greatly indented, principal inlets, the Gulf of Adalia and Makri on the S.; those of Smyrna, Koe, Scala-Nova, Smyrna, and Adramyia, on the W., and those of Ismid and Sinope, on the N. coast. Chief rivers are the Kizil-Irmak (anc. Halye), Yeşil-Irmak, and Sakaria (anc. Iris and Sangarius), flowing into the Black Sea; the Kodrus, Grimalti, and Mendere (anc. Hermus, Caucas, and Mæander), into the Aegean; the Şihin and Jyhoon (anc. Sarus and Pyramus), into the Mediterranean; and the Euphrates forming the E. frontier. There are numerous fresh and salt water lakes; Lake Tuz-gul or Khodj-hussar, is the largest. It is 20 m. in circumference, and 5,000 feet above the sea. Its waters contain 32 per cent of saline matter. The mines produce copper, silver, lead, iron; alum, nitre, and rock-salt are also abundant. Rice, barley, maize, sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, opium, and most of the products of S. Europe flourish; and the mtns. in the N. yield good timber. Other products are wool, silk, galls, nuts, skins, furs, cochineal, madder, sponge, meerschau clay. Manufactures, leather, carpets, cotton and woollen stuffs, and a few other articles. ASIA MINOR is divided into the pashalics of Anatolia, Ithil, Karamania, Sivas, Marash, and a part of Trebizond. Principal cities, Smyrna, Brusa, Trebizond, Kütahya, Angora, Koush (anc. Iconium), and Kausariyah (anc. Cæsarea), with Soutari, opposite Constantinople. Smyrna, Trebizond, and Brusa, are the principal seats of commerce; but all around the coasts are numerous small ports, where fairs and markets for the produce of the inland districts are frequently held. This region was anciently the seat of the famous kingdoms of Troy and Lydia, and afterwards formed a proconsulate under the Romans. It is the birthplace of Homer, Thales, Pythagoras, Herodotus, and many other of the most distinguished poets, philosophers, historians, and artists of antiquity; and ruins scattered over almost every portion of its surface, attest its former wealth and prosperity.

ASIATIC OR EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO, the largest collection of islands on the globe, extending along the equator, from the S.E. coast of Asia to the W. of Australia, comprehending a space between lat. 11° S. and 19° N., lon. 60° to 150° E.; having the China Sea on the N., the Pacific on the E., S., and W., the Indian Ocean. The numerous islands may be arranged under 5 groups.—1. Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Madura, Sunda, Borneo, and the W. and larger portion of Borneo.

This includes the western and larger isls., where the soil is good; to which may be added the adjoining Malay peninsula. Rice and pepper are cultivated, and the inhabitants are the most civilized of the Archipelago.—2. Celebes, Sumbawa, Flores, Timor, Sunda Island, and E. part of Borneo. This includes the central isls., where the soil is inferior. Rice not largely produced, and sago partly forms a substitute.—3. Ceram, Boero, Gilolo (Molucca Island), Timorant, Arroe Island, and Papua, the latter coming within the range of Australasia; this forms the eastern division, the climate and products of the soil of which differ from the two preceding. Aromatic plants, as the spices, characterize the Molucca isls. Sago is the chief article of food, and the inhabitants are inferior in civilization.—4. Mindanao, Sooloo Island, Palawan, and N.E. part of Borneo. This forms a central group N.E. of No. 2. Rice is produced, but sago forms the chief food. Spices of inferior quality. The natives are superior in civilization to those in division 2.—5. Luzon, and all that portion of the Philippine isls. stretching from lat. 10° to 19° N. Soil and climate adapted for rice, tobacco, and sugar-cane, but not for spices. A different race of inhabitants from those of the other groups. These isls. lie within the range of the hurricanes. The isls. of the Eastern Archipelago are all more or less of volcanic origin, and exhibit at the present time, active volcanoes in numerous localities. The older formations, however, are also found forming the basis of many of the islands. Mtn. ranges of considerable height, as well as isolated mtns. are very prevalent; the elev. extending from 5,000 to 15,000 feet. Extensive valleys intervene, dense forests, and a most luxuriant and varied vegetation cover the whole surface of the soil. In the older primary and secondary rocks, metalliferous ores are abundant. Gold is found in various places, especially in Borneo and Sumatra; tin mines in the isl. of Banca; silver, copper, and iron, in other localities; diamonds are found in Borneo; sulphur is abundant, as also lignite, naphtha, asphaltum; coal is found in Luzon and other localities, and native salt is procured from springs in Java. The climate is tropical, the solar heat tempered, however, by the insular condition of the land, and by copious moisture. In the Western Isls. the thermometer ranges from 76° to 98° Fahr. These isls. experience the atmospheric changes incident to the monsoons, and the N.E. isls. are within the range of the tropical hurricanes. A good soil, elevated temperature, and genial moisture, produce a profuse and splendid vegetation. Palms, bamboos, rattans, teak, ebony, sandal-wood, sassafras, acaia, and resinous and gum-bearing trees in abundance. The clove, nutmeg, and various aromatic trees, abound in the Moluccas. Pepper, ginger, cubebs, and various spices, in Java and Sumatra. Cotton, tobacco, sugar, sweet potato, in the Philippines, and other islands. Flowers of the most splendid hues, mostly yellow and red, spring up in spontaneous abundance; and fruits, as the orange, lemon, shaddock, pomegranate, pine-apple, guava, mango, durian, are very plentiful. The grains cultivated in the larger and more civilized isls., are maize, millet, pulses, and rice. Throughout the other isls., the amylaceous pith of the sago palm (Metroygon sago) is the chief food of the inhabitants, forming, in this locality, a peculiarity in the mode of human subsistence not found in any other part of the world. The ox and buffalo are used for agricultural purposes. The elephant, tiger, panther, deer, wild boar, rhinoceros, many species of the monkey and the crane, outang. Birds of the most varied kinds and beautiful plumage fill the woods, as the argus pheasant, peacock, bird of paradise, several useful kinds of domestic fowls, and a species of swallow, which builds the edible nest so eagerly prized by the Chinese. Tortoises are numerous on the eastern shores, and fish, including the pomfret, calcap, sole, abound in the seas. The Holoferria or sea slug, another Chinese luxury, cyters, and numerous shell-fish, are also common. The lac insect exists in most of the forests, and honey bees are numerous, but have not been domesticated. Two distinct races of men inhabit this region. The Malay, forming the great bulk of the pop., especially of the W. isls., is of a light brown or olive complexion, with long straight hair, short stature, and robust body, round face, and small features. Strong and active in habits, in many communities considerably advanced in civilization; in other situations, roving and restless pirates,—and differing also in physical form in many of the isls. The Papuan or black race have negro features and curly hair, small stature, and spare and puny form. These are in a ruder state, are less susceptible of civilization, and in many of the islands inhabit the interior of the country in a savage state. Many Chinese emigrants have settled in Borneo and other isls., and a small proportion of Hindoos. The Hindoo faith is professed by a portion of the native races, but Mohammedanism is the prevailing religion. Christianity has been introduced into the European settlements. The Dutch possess Java, Madura, Amboyna, Banda, Timor, and part of Sumatra, and have some settlements in Borneo, Celebes, etc. The Philippines belong to Spain. Singapore is a British station for trade and shipping; and Labuan, on the N.W. of Borneo, has recently been established for the same purposes. The exports to China are spices, scented wood, ebony, ivory, horns, tortoise-shell, sharks' fins, edible bird nests, trepang, gold dust, drugs, and European woollens and cottons: India spices, gold, silver, and tin. The chief imports are black tea, coarse porcelain, wrought iron, cottons, silks, shoes, umbrellas from China; cotton cloths, and chintzes from India; cottons, woollens, saddlery, and other manufactured goods from England. [Particular details will be found under JAVA, SUMATRA, BANDA, MOLOCCAS, PHILIPPINES.]

Is enclosed by a dry ditch and mud wall, 2 or 3 m. in circ, and is built mostly of wood. The town is well drained and paved; its caravanseras and bazars are ill supplied with goods, and its trade is confined to exchanges of horses, sheep, felt, and woollen stuffs brought hither by the Turkomans, for cotton, silk, and woollen fabrics, copper, and iron wares, tobacco, etc., received by way of the Caspian.

ASTRAKHAN or ASTRACAN, a gov. and administrative prov. of Russia, between lat. 45° and 49° 50' N., lon. 49° 30' and 51° E., lying along the N.W. coast of the Caspian Sea, having E., N., and W. the govs. Orenburg, Saratov and the country of the Don-Cossacks, S. and S.W. the Caucasus and the Caspian Sea. Area 50,000 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 284,400. The climate is excessive; the mean annual temp. 48° Fahr., that of summer 70°, and winter 15°. The Volga divides the prov. into two nearly equal parts, which are mostly mere sandy deserts; the delta and banks of the river being the only productive dists., and there the fruits of S. climates are raised. The cultivation of the vine was introduced in the 17th century, and grapes are raised in the vicinity of Astrakhan. Little corn is sown, and the produce so much below the wants of the pop. Rearing of horses, cattle, and sheep, sturgeon fishing, and procuring salt in the marshes of the Steppes, are the chief branches of industry. The annual value of the sturgeon taken in the Volga is estimated at 2,500,000 rubles; and above 30,000 barrels of caviar have been exported from Astrakhan in a single year. The pop. comprises besides Russians, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Kurgis, Bokharases, Persians, and Hindoos. The gov. is divided into 4 circles; its cap., Astrakhan, is the only place of importance.

ATHENS, Athens, the cap. of the kingdom of Greece or Hellas, and of the gov. of Attica, is situated in a small plain on the N.W. side of the Gulf of Egina, between the rivers Ilissus E., and Cephissus W., 5 m. from its harbour, the Piræus. Lat. of the Parthenon 37° 58' 10" N., lon. 23° 48' 50" E. Pop. (1853) 31,126. Is the residence of the sovereign, has a university, and supreme courts of the Archbishop of Attica. The Acropolis or ancient centre of Athens, on which most of its noblest monuments are placed, is an isolated rocky height, rising 150 feet above the adjacent plain. Its summit is enclosed by walls 2,330 yards in circuit. The modern city is built on its W. and N. sides, in which directions many new thoroughfares have been laid out. Since 1835, the old walls, which during the Turkish rule surrounded Athens, have been taken down, and well-built houses have been erected on every side. The new palace, finished in 1843, at the foot of Mount Lycabettus, and about a quarter of a mile from the centre of the city, is a quadrangular building, 300 feet in length by 280 in breadth, with two internal courts, a portico of Penticile marble, and richly decorated apartments. In front is a square, in which the bloodless revolution of Sept. 15th, 1844, was enacted. The university, founded in 1836, is the finest modern building, and contains an anatomical theatre, and a library of 28,000 volumes, 39 professors and teachers, and, in 1854, 690 students. There are besides, seven gymnasia, with upwards of 1,000 pupils, a military academy, theological seminary, a normal school, a botanic garden, and a society of natural history. The cathedral is a handsome Byzantine structure, with a modern steeple. Other chief modern edifices are the barracks, civil and military hospitals, a cathedral, an English chapel, Protestant and Greek cemeteries, royal mint, chamber of representatives, theatre, and observatory. Its manufactures are insignificant, the chief being walking-sticks and smoking-tubes made from the blackthorn of Parnassus and other classic spots. A good road now connects Athens with the Piræus. [PIRÆUS]. Athens is reputed to have been founded by Cecrops, a.c. 1535; it fell to Rome, a.c. 86, since then it has belonged successively to Gothic, Byzantine, Burgundian, Frank, Catalan, Florentine, Ve-

ATHENS, and TACIA. Principal antiquities, the Acropolis or ancient citadel, surmounted by the Parthenon, an edifice of white marble, 228 feet in length by 100 feet in breadth, and still tolerably perfect; the Erechtheion, a building 90 feet in length; remains of the Temple of the Wingless Victory, recently restored in a judicious manner by the government; the Propylæa, or grand entrance in front of the foregoing temples; and the theatre of Herodes Atticus at the S.W. angle of the Acropolis. N. of the Acropolis is the Temple of Theseus, one of the most perfect monuments of anc. Athens, having 84 remaining Doric columns outside, and containing a rich museum of antiquities. Areopagus or Mars' Hill, where St Paul addressed the Athenians, the Pnyx, where popular meetings were held, the Elusium, the prison of Socrates, and Tower of the Winds, vestiges of the Temple and Theatre of Bacchus, the Grotto of Apollo and Pan. Outside of the city, 16 Corinthian columns, 60 feet in height, on a raised platform, remain of the Temple of Jupiter Olympus, and near the Ilissus, the Stadium or ancient race-course is still traceable. Athens became the seat of the Greek government (removed thither from Nauplia), in 1835.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, Atlanticum Oceanus, one of the five great hydrographical divisions of the globe, occupies an immense longitudinal valley, and extends from the Arctic circle on the N. to the Antarctic circle on the S., bounded W. by the coast of America to Cape Horn, and E. by the shores of Europe and Africa to the Cape of Good Hope. Its extreme breadth is about 5,000 m., and its area is computed at 25,000,000 sq. m. It is naturally divided into three portions; 1st, the N.; 2d, the S.; and 3d, the Intertropical Atlantic. The North Sea or German Ocean, the Caribbean Sea, and the Irish Sea, form portions of the Atlantic, but the Baltic and the Mediterranean, which communicate with the North Sea by narrow channels, are properly considered separate seas. The principal gulfs of the Atlantic are, in Europe, the Bay of Biscay (Golfo de Gascogne); in Africa, the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The chief islands are, in Europe, the British Isles and Iceland; in Africa, the Azores, Madeira, and Canary Islands, and the Archipelago of the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Antilles, Newfoundland, and the islands of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Atlantic, with its branches, drains nearly the whole of Europe W. of the basin of the Volga; all North America E. of the Rocky Mountains and the mountains of Mexico; and the whole of South America E. of the Andes. Its chief affluents are, in Europe, the Rhine, Loire, and Tagus; in Africa, the Senegal, Niger, and Congo; and in America, the St. Lawrence, Mississippi, Orinoco, Amazon, and La Plata. The bed of the Atlantic is unequal in elevation, some places rising in immense sand banks to within a few fathoms of the surface, and others sinking to unfathomable depths. The most extensive banks are those of Newfoundland, the Dogger in the German Ocean, and the Agulhas off the S. point of Africa. In 1852, Capt. Denham, H.M.S. Herald, in lat. 38° 49' S., lon. 37° 6' W.; found bottom in 7,706 fathoms. From Cape Clear in Ireland to Cape Race in Newfoundland, a ridge extends for 1,640 m. in length, by 401 m. in breadth, with an average depth of two miles, on which are deposited a thick layer of shells. On this ridge was laid the electric cable uniting Europe with America in 1858. The trade winds blow regularly in the intertropical portion of the Atlantic; beyond these limits the winds are variable. From the prevalence of S.W. winds in the North Atlantic, the voyage from Europe to America, on an average of six years' sailing between Liverpool and New York, requires 40 days, while the return voyage is performed in 23 days. The principal currents of the Atlantic are, the Equatorial current, which flows from the coast of Africa to the Caribbean Sea, with a velocity of from 30 to 70 miles a day, and the gulf stream which, leaving the Gulf of Mexico, flows through the strait of Florida, with a velocity of 80 m. a day, and a temperature of 86° Fahr., and extends with a gradually decreasing velocity and diminished temperature to the Azores. Immense numbers of fish are found in the Atlantic, and herring and cod-fishing are important branches of industry in northern Europe. A great part of the surface of the Atlantic, between lat. 16° and 45° N., lon. 35° and 75° W., is covered with a species of weed (Fucus natans) of a beautiful green colour, from which circumstance it is called the Sargasso Sea—the sea of duck-weed, or the grassy sea. In the higher latitudes of the North and South Atlantic, navigation is impeded by immense icebergs, which are floated from the polar regions, and although these are generally melted before reaching the frequented parts of the ocean, they have occasionally been met with as far S. as lat. 40° 45' in the North Atlantic, and in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope in the South Atlantic. [For extensive information on the navigation and currents of the Atlantic Ocean, see Johnston's Physical Atlas, Hydrographical Division.]

ATLANTIC, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S. of New Jersey State. Area 656 sq. m. Pop. 8,961. Soil generally light and sandy.

ATLAS, a celebrated but little known mountain system of North Africa, including all the heights in the Barbary States, as well as those which are dispersed through the region of Sahara. The principal chain appears to extend from near Cape Nun, on the Atlantic, to the E. of the great Syrtis in Tripoli, traversing the Empire of Morocco, the colony of Algeria, and the regency of Tunis. The highest known points of the system, which are snow clad, are situated in Morocco, E. of the capital, and S. of the town of Fez, and the chain appears to diminish in elevation as it extends towards the E. Several secondary chains detach themselves from the main system, and extend in different directions, one of which terminates at the Strait of Gibraltar. These secondary chains appear to be connected by intermediary mountains, which traverse Algiers and Tunis. The name Little Atlas is applied to the secondary range of the country of Sous, to distinguish it from the Great Atlas, which is confined to the elev. mntns. of Morocco. To the S. of Tripoli several low ranges extend from the principal chain into the Sahara and the desert of Libya. The highest points, proceeding from W. to E., are estimated thus: in Morocco, 13,000 feet; Algeria, 7,678 feet; Tunis, 4,478 feet; Tripoli, 3,200 feet. The lion and panther are found in the wooded regions of Mount Atlas. Snow lies for several weeks in winter on many of the higher ranges of Atlas, and is seldom absent from the summit of Miltan, 27 m. S.E. Morocco, which is 11,400 feet in elevation. The Atlas and its ramifications enclose many valleys of luxuriant fertility, and its flanks are clothed with dense forests of pine, oak, cork, white poplar, wild olive, etc. In so far as has been ascertained, its composition is chiefly calcareous; copper, iron, lead, antimony, and rock-salt are abundant, but few mines are wrought to advantage. This mountain chain figures prominently in the mythology of the ancients, as being supposed to sustain the heavens.

AUSTIN, a bay and town on S.E. point of the island Barbadoes, West Indies.

AUSTONLEY, a township of England, co. York. West Riding, pa. Almondbury, 74 m. S.E. Huddersfield. Area, 1,760 ac. Pop. 2,234.

AUSTRAL ISLANDS, a group of five isls. in the S. Pacific, between lat. 22° 27' and 37° 36' S., lon. 144° 11' and 150° 47' W.; chief islands, Raiavai, Tubuai, Rurutu, Rimatua, and Rapa.

AUSTRALASIA (SOUTH ASIA) or MELANESIA, a division of the globe, forming a part of Oceania, extending between the equator and lat. 47° S., consisting of the continent of Australia, Tasmania (Van Diemen Land), New Zealand, and those parts of the Eastern Archipelago and Polynesia between lon. 110° and 160° E., viz., Papua, the Arru Islands, Timor-Laut, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, and the Admiralty, Salomon, New Hebrides, and Queen Charlotte Islands. The area in sq. m., and the pop. of the settlements, are given under the respective names. See also AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

AUSTRALIA or NEW HOLLAND, a vast extent of land, composing the main portion of Australasia, and lying S. of the Asiatic Archipelago, between lat. 10° and 30° S., lon. 118° and 164° E., having W. the Indian Ocean; E. the Pacific Ocean; N. the Sea of Timor and Torres Strait, separating it from Timor, Papua, etc.; and S. Bass Strait, dividing it from Tasmania (Van Diemen Land). Length, E. to W., 2,560 m.; greatest breadth about 1,980 m. Area estimated at 2,700,000 sq. m. Australia is but little indented with arms of the ocean, and presents no wide estuaries or rivers. The principal indentations are the Gulf of Carpentaria and Cambridge Gulf on the N.; Halifax and Moreton Bays on the E.; Western Port, Port Phillip, the Gulf of St Vincent, and Spencer Gulf on the S.; and Shark Bay, with a few others, on the W. coast. Botany Bay, Jervis Bay, Corner Inlet, etc., are inlets of small size, many of which are met with. The coasts of Australia are generally deficient in good harbours. Only the S.E. part, with comparatively small sections in the W. and S., and an inconsiderable tract in the N., near Port Essington, have been yet thoroughly explored. In the S.E. a succession of mountain ranges stretches from Gipps Land to lat. 26° S., at a distance from the coast varying generally from 80 to 100 m. The Australian Alps or Warragong mountains, belong to this chain. They attain an elevation of 5,000 to 6,563 feet, and are in their highest part almost constantly covered with snow; Mount York (Blue Mountains), rises to 3,292 feet. The resemblance of the geological formations of these mountains to those of the Ural, led Sir R. Impey Murchison, in 1845, to foretell the existence of gold in the Australian Cordillera; and, in February 1851, Mr. Hargraves discovered extensive diggings in the districts near Bathurst and Wellington, New South Wales. Since that time, gold has been found in various and wide spread localities in the province of Victoria. The only great river system of the interior hitherto explored, is that of the Murray, whose main stream takes its rise in the Australian Alps, but is swelled in its lower course by the Murrumbidgee and the Darling from the north, with their many tributaries, the Lachlan, Bogan, Macquarrie, Peel, Balonne, Maranoa, etc., and from the south, with the Mitta, Owens, Goulburn, Campaspe, Loddon, and Wimmera, its basin being known to extend through at least 10° of lat. and 13° of lon., and probably comprising a much greater extent. Other principal rivers are the Hunter, Hawkesbury, Shoalhaven, Macleay, Clarence, Richmond, Burnett, Fitzroy, Burdekin, etc., debouching on the E.: Snowy River, Yarra, Barwon, Hopkins, and Glenelg on the S.; Swan and Canning on the W.; and Victoria, Adelaide, Liverpool, Alligator, Albert, and Mitchell on the N. coast: but few serve to facilitate internal navigation. Principal lakes are those of Victoria and Torrens in South Australia. Start, in 1844, penetrated to the centre of the country, between Spencer Gulf to the S. and Carpentaria to the N., experiencing utter sterility and drought. Gregory, in 1856, in exploring the Victoria River, N.W. Australia, seems to have come upon the same central desert 300 to 300 m. from the coast. In 1858 he traced the other Victoria River N. of New South Wales, into Cooper's Creek of Start, and finally to Lake Torrens and the head of Spencer Gulf. It traverses the eastern part of this great central Australian desert, and its long and winding channel was not only destitute of stream, but from its few and scattered pools scarcely supplied the expedition with water. Soil various; a large part of the surface is occupied by extensive sandy and stoney deserts; elsewhere fine pasture and woodlands are met with. A third part of the continent lies within the torrid, and the rest in the S. temperate zone. The climate is peculiar, and subject to great vicissitudes of temperature. The N. half of the country being mostly within the tropics and the range of the monsoons, is subject in summer (between November and April) to heavy rains, which, however, are very irregular in their occurrence, and last only for a few hours daily. In other parts of Australia, years of complete drought occasionally occur, followed by years of flood; but here the hot is also in general the dry season, a circumstance favourable to health. The N.W. winds blowing over the sandy deserts of the interior, towards the colonies of the S.E., are dry and hot, raising the therm. to 80° and 110° Fahr. On the other hand, the E. winds are often cold, and frost is common in winter (June and July), even in the southern lowlands. Mineral products comprise granite, sandstone, limestone, coal, slates, lead, and rich copper ores. Later have been the famous gold discoveries, together with rich ore of tin. Of 5,710 plants discovered, 5,440 are peculiar to this continent. Maize, wheat, flax, tobacco, indigo, vines, olives, and in some parts sugar and cotton, are raised; but sheep-farming is the most flourishing branch of pastoral economy, and it is principally as a wool-growing country that Australia is rising into commercial importance. In 1793, eight merino sheep were introduced by McArthur, a settler, and in 1858 there were 16,000,000. The indigenous quadrupeds comprise 68 species, of which 46, including the kangaroo, wombat and other pouched animals, are peculiar to this continent and its adjacent islands. The singular ornithorynchus paradoxus is an animal found here only. The native Australians are viewed by many as a distinct variety of the human race, and their numerous dialects have no affinity with any other language. Their skin is of an earthy black, hair straight, forehead low and full, nose broad, lips thick, stature short, frame slight, and more adapted to feats of agility than of strength. They live in roving tribes. Many tribes go naked, practising cannibalism, and having scarcely any notions of a deity, or of social arts and order. The race is becoming extinct. In Victoria the census of 1857 gives only 1,768, while 20 years before, they were upwards of 20,000. The comparative scarcity of water, which has hitherto mainly prevented Europeans penetrating far into the interior of this continent, suggests a doubt as to its capability of supporting any large uncivilised population. The Dutch or the Spaniards, about the beginning of the 17th century, were the earliest European discoverers of Australia, though little was known of it until after Dampier, Wallis, and afterwards Cook, explored its various coasts. The favourable report of it by the latter was followed by the first British settlement at Port Jackson, in 1788. The last discoveries are protracted into the present century, for it was only in 1802 that the now celebrated Port Phillip, with a great extent of coast to the westward, were first made known. The name of New Holland given by the Dutch to the north-western coasts, first discovered by them, and subsequently extended to the whole of the mainland, is now supplanted by the more appropriate name of Australia. The British settlement of New South Wales or Sydney, was made in 1788. The settlement of Western Australia or Swan River was established in 1829. South Australia, established in 1834, and colonised 1836, extends along the coast from Fowler Bay in the W., to beyond Cape Northumberland, or from lon. 132° to 141° E., of which Adelaide is the capital. The Port Phillip District, now Victoria, chief town, Melbourne, colonised in 1835, was formerly a dependency of New South Wales. North Australia was colonised by the British Government in 1838, but has since been abandoned. Australand, on the western coast, about 80 m. south of Swan River, was established in 1841. [AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.—NEW SOUTH WALES, ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, PERTH, SYDNEY, TASMANIA, VICTORIA.]

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES. This designation is now so common, that the important group it refers to has become dissociated from the old geographical and vague term Australasia, which comprehends a great part of Australia and various islands on the northern coasts still uncolonised, and is a term not much in practical use. These settlements, in the order respectively in which they were founded, consist of, 1st, New South Wales, established as a penal colony in 1788; 2d, Van Diemen's Land, now Tasmania, established, also as a penal colony, 1803; 3d, Western Australia, lately made a penal settlement, but established free in 1829; 4th, Victoria, so named in 1851, but colonised in 1835; 5th, South Australia, settled in 1836; 6th, New Zealand, officially established in 1840, but colonised for sometime previously. Twenty-five years ago Australia scarcely appeared in the commerce of Britain, and two of the principal colonies, Victoria and South Australia, had no existence. They now collectively contain upwards of 1,000,000 colonists. Besides aboriginal population; their united imports amount to 27,500,000, and exports to 22,250,000, and the net annual public revenues, apart from loans, are above 5,000,000. The chief articles of Australian produce are gold, copper, and wool. Of gold, the annual produce is nearly 12,000,000, chiefly from Victoria; of copper, it is about 500,000, all from South Australia; of wool, it is now above 54,000,000 lbs., worth about 4,000,000, contributed in various proportions by all the colonies. Nearly the entire of these valuable productions is now annually conveyed, in a fleet of magnificent merchant shipping, direct to British ports. The following table illustrates the area, population, finances, and commerce, of this group of colonies:—

Colonies.	Area in Miles.	Pop. 1835.	Exports 1857.	Imports 1857.	Wool lbs. 1857.	Gold, oz. 1857.	Copper 1857.	Agric. Pro. 1857.	Public Rev. 1857.	Public Debt. 1857.

The population is exclusive of aborigines, which in New Zealand still number about 60,000, but which in all are rapidly diminishing. There is not one left in Tasmania; in Victoria about 700. In the other colonies His small numbers.

In Victoria the wool clip has decidedly fallen off since 1854, in which year the export attained to 23,000,000 lbs. In all the other colonies there is a progressive yearly increase, particularly in South Australia and New Zealand. The year 1858 was marked by the extension of gold production to New Zealand (Nelson), and by a decided increase in the yield of the New South Wales mines.

The climate of these colonies, although averaging from 5° to 15° higher in the annual mean than that of Britain, is, nevertheless, suited to the Anglo-Saxon constitution. The northern localities around Moreton Bay verge upon the tropics, while the southern extremities of Tasmania and New Zealand stretch into the cool regions of the 44th and 48th parallel of south latitude. Improved navigation has reduced the passage by sailing ships from England to about 80 days, and by steam to one-third less, while by the overland route the postal delivery may be expected in little more than a month and a half. In 1855, these colonies were placed on the footing of self-government, and since that time they have entered with increased ardour upon the path of progress. Extensive railway lines have been projected, and are already partially constructed, while telegraphic communication is completed between the colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, with the prospective addition of Tasmania, by a submarine cable across Bass Strait. The Australian colonies have recently had under consideration the important subject of a federative union, but as yet nothing definite has been arranged.

AUSTRALIA FELIX, a name given by the late Sir Thomas Mitchell in 1836, in complement to the fine scenery of a part of Victoria he was then exploring. It comprises the Mount Alexander and other present gold fields between the river Goulbourne and the Pyrenees Hills. The colonists most readily extended so flattering a designation to the entire territory, and this poetical idea was in a fair way of supplanting the earlier "Port Phillip," or "Southern District," when in 1851, on the occasion of the territory being officially detached from New South Wales and made a separate colony, all contentions were merged in the new name of Victoria.

AUSTRALIAN ALPS. [ALPS.]

AUSTREY, a ps. of Engl., co Warwick, 6 m E N E of Tamworth. Area 2,280 ac. Pop 555.

AUSTRIA (ARCHDUCHY OF, the central prov and nucleus of the Austrian empire, and seat of its cap., comprised (including Salzburg) between lat 47° and 48° N lon 12° 10' and 17° E, having N Bohemia and Moravia, E Hungary, S Styria, Carinthia, and the Tyrol, and W the Tyrol and Bavaria. Area 15,052 sq m Pop (1854) 2,469,868. The North Alps, which form its S boundary, next to Styria, extend their crests, to the banks of the Danube, which traverses the province from W to E, the Inn river forms its N W, and the March part of its E frontier. It has numerous mountain lakes, and picturesque scenery. Forests and vineyards extensive. Is fertile, and admirably cultivated. Wheat, oats, and barley are raised, and it has been estimated that 25,000,000 gallons of wine are made here annually. Mineral products comprise gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, arsenic, alum, coal, and graphite. Has weaving and spinning of flax, cotton, and wool. This prov is divided by the river Rhine into the govts of Upper and Lower Austria (Land Ober und Unter der Enns). Lower Austria is subdivided into four circles, — I. Lower Wiener-wald, cap

Vienna; II. Upper Wiener-wald, cap St Pölten; III. Lower Marchfeld, cap Kornneuburg; IV. Upper Marchfeld, cap. Krems, and the municipal dist. of Vienna. The regency of Lower Austria has its seat at Vienna, and is charged with the civil administration of the prov. Upper Austria is subdivided into five circles, — I. Mühl, cap Linz; II. Traun, cap Steyer; III. Hainburg, cap Wels; IV. Inn, cap Ried; V. Salzburg, cap Salzburg, and the regency is established at Linz. The military affairs of the archduchy are directed by the military commandant of Vienna, who has under him the military commandant of Linz. After Vienna, the chief cities are Linz, Wiener-Neustadt and Salzburg.

AUSTRIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdiv of Germany, which comprised Austria Proper or Lower Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, and the Tyrol, bounded N by Moravia, Bohemia, and the circles of Bavaria and Swabia, W Switzerland, S Lombardy and Italia, and F Croatia, and Hungary, — most of which territories are now included in the Austrian empire.

AUSTRIA (FEDERAL OF), German Oesterreichische Kaiserthum, Fr Empire d'Autriche, a state of Central Europe, cap. Wien (Vienna) situated chiefly between lat 45° and 51° 2' N (but extending in Dalmatia to lat 43° 8' N) lon 8° 35' and 26° 30' E, bounded N by Russia, Prussia, Saxony, and Bavaria, S by Parma, Modena, the Pontif States, the Adriatic, and the Ottoman Empire, W by Lichtenstein, Switzerland, and the Sardinian States, and E by the Russian Empire. Area 257,890 sq miles Pop in 1854, 39,411,300. The principal part of the territory presents the form of an oblong square, parallel with the equator lengthwise, and its centre is indicated, nearly, by the position of Pesth, on the Danube. Three great main systems cover the empire, with their ramifications, the Alps in the S W, the Bohemian and Moravian mts in the N W, and the Carpathians, forming a great curve, the one extremity of which abuts on the Danube at Presburg in the N W, and the other at Orsova in the S E. The most elev summits are in the Alps of Tyrol, where the Ortles peaks attain the height of 12,779 feet, next Bratscheys in the Carpathians, 9,628 feet, and 3d, the Schneekoppe in the Riesengebirge, the culminating point of the mts of Bohemia and Moravia, 5,275 feet. The most mountainous countries are the Tyrol, Salzburg, Upper Styria, the W part of Upper Carinthia, and the E part of Transylvania. Austria contains many extensive plains, remarkable for their uniform level, the principal of these are the plains of Lower Austria, on both sides of the Danube, the plains of Hungary, the plain of Slavonia, and that of the Po. Is abundantly supplied with water, nearly all of which is collected into six great rivers, viz the Danube and the Dneister, flowing to the Black Sea, the Po and the Adige, to the Adriatic, the Vistula to the Baltic, and the Elbe to the German Ocean, — it contains also a great many lakes, the most important of which are, in the mountain regions, the Lakes Maggiore, Como, Lugano, Isèo, and Garda, on the south slopes of the Alps, and in the plains, the Platten-see, and Lake Neusiedel, the two most extensive sheets of water in the empire, in Hungary, which country, from its flatness, contains also the greatest number of marshes. The principal gulfs are those of Venice, Trieste, Quarnero, and Cattaro. The Austrian Empire is comprised between the southern lines of 60° and 50°. The Alpine region is the most rainy country in Europe, the greatest amount of rain falls in the N of the Lombardobruck, Prague, Brünn, Lemberg, Zara, and Verona; and from these a second appeal to the board of justice,—except in Transylvania, where the gubernium or court of appeal, is the highest under the emperor. The subordinate civil divisions of the provs. are into counties in Hungary and Transylvania, viciats (quarters) in Lower Austria, delegations in Austrian Italy, and circles elsewhere. The empire is ecclesiastically divided into 15 archbishoprics, 76 bishoprics, 19 Protestant superintendencies, and 28,908 parishes, of which 19,606 are Roman Catholic, and 9,400 are acatholic. In 1851, there were 3,561,455 Protestants, 26,357,172 Roman Catholics, 6,853,781 Greeks, and 759,005 Jews. The Greek Catholics and the Protestants mostly inhabit the E. provs.; the Unitarians are nearly confined to Transylvania. Education has made rapid strides in Austria—the law requiring that, in every province of the empire, every child between the ages of six and twelve shall be educated either in the school or at home. In the manufacturing districts, no child is allowed to be sent into a factory before completing its ninth year. After that age, children in factories are compelled to attend classes on Friday evenings and Sunday mornings till they have attained their fifteenth year. In Roman Catholic districts the school inspector is the priest, and in Protestant districts the dissenting minister. In 1842 the population of Austria, including Lombardy, but excluding Hungary, amounted to 25,304,122; and for this population there were provided 30,298 primary day-schools, or 1 for every 1,247 of the population; besides 11,140 evening-class schools. The 20,298 primary schools had 41,809 teachers, or 1 for every 600 of the population. In addition to these there were 8 universities, 20 academies, 12 lycæums, 49 theological colleges, 53 philosophical colleges, 188 gymnasia or public schools, 126 special schools, and 1,252 private schools. These had in regular attendance 155,746 pupils. The military force of the empire is composed of a standing army, and an army of reserve (Landwehr). The permanent force in time of peace is 414,000 men. In 1854, the army was increased to 733,624 men. Austria possesses a great many fortifications, of which Josephstadt, Theresienstadt, Olmütz, Mantua, Peschiera, and Comoro, belong to the 1st class; Peterwardein, Brod, Aligradua, Arad, Eszék, Karistadt, Karlsburg, Munkatsch, Temeswar, Ragusa, Cattaro, Zara, Legnago, Venice, Kufstein, Salzburg, Prague, and Königgrätz to the 2d class. Has also garrisons in Mentz, Piacenza, Ferrara, and Comacchio. The naval armament, under a naval commander at Venice, is 6 frigates, 5 corvettes, 7 brigs, 6 schooners, 11 steamers, and 61 smaller vessels, mounting in all 749 guns. The public revenue arises from direct taxes on property, industry, and incomes, with personal and Jews' taxes, indirect imposts on tobacco and provisions, a salt monopoly, legacy and stamp duties, post-office and custom dues, and the revenues from the crown domains and mines; the whole estimated in 1855 to amount to 23,713,700*l.* yearly. The expenditure is not readily ascertained; the army, and internal administration, are the principal sources of expense. The public debt in 1847 was about 99,000,000*l.*

Azores or Western Islands (Portug. Agoras), a group of 9 isls. in the North Atlantic Ocean, between lat. 36° 56' and 39° 44' N., lon. 25° 10' and 31° 15' W., belonging to Portugal, from which they are distant about 800 m. W. They consist of the following isls., ranging from E. to W.—St Mary, St Michael, Terceira, Graciosa, San Jorge, Pico, Fayal, Flores, and Corvo, with some rocky islets, and have an united area of about 709 sq. m. Pop. (1853) 243,572. They are of volcanic origin, with steep and rugged coasts, and abounding with deep ravines and elevated mountains, the lowest of which, Pico Alto in St Mary Island, is 1,200 feet, and the most elevated, the peak of Pico, island of Pico, 7,613 feet in height. The climate of the isls. is temperate and healthy, the thermometer ranging from 45° to 86° Fahr. They are subject to violent earthquakes, are well watered and fertile, producing excellent wines, all kinds of grain and pulse, with bananas, oranges, and other fruits of the finest quality, the sugar-cane, coffee, tobacco, and rice. The few birds or animals on the islands resemble those of Britain, and two-thirds of its plants are British. Breeds of live stock, especially hogs, originally imported from Europe, are extensively reared. Exports oranges, wine, brandy, grain, pulse, salt-pork and beef, cheese, etc. to Portugal, and coarse linens to Portugal and Brazil. Imports woollen and cotton stuffs, hardwares and slops from England; pitch, iron, glass, and cordage from Hamburg and North Europe; fish, staves, timber, tar, and oil, from the U. S.; rum, coffee, and sugar, from Brazil; salt, lime, and tea from Portugal. The inhabitants are a mixture of Portuguese and Negroes. The Azores were first colonized by the Portuguese in the 16th century, at which time they were uninhabited and covered with forests. They form a colonial government, of which the cap. is Angra, in the isl. of Terceira; but Ponta Delgada, and Ribeira Grande, in St Miguel, are larger towns.

AZOV (SEA OR GULF OF). Palus Mæoticus, an extensive lagoon of South Europe, between lat. 45° 20' and 47° 18' N., lon. 36° and 39° E., entirely surrounded by the Russian dominions N.E. of the Black Sea, with which it communicates only by the Strait of Yenikale (anc. Cimmerian Bosphorus). Length S.W. to N.E. about 235 m.; greatest breadth 110 m., water brackish. The Don enters it at its N.E. extremity, and on its shores are the towns Taganrog, Mariupol, Berdiansk, Yenikale, and Azov. This gulf is supposed to have been at one time connected with the Caspian Sea, by means of a strait, which is indicated by a low tract of land. The E. shore is low, the N. rises to about 100 feet. The W. is formed by the sandy peninsula of Arabat, which separates it from the Sivach or Putrid Sea. It is very shallow, but of great importance to Russian commerce. Great part of the produce of Siberia is forwarded through it by the Don. It appears to be gradually filling up, and its muddy shores are very unhealthy.—[TAGANROG.] The fisheries of this sea are important. It is usually frozen from November to March, when navigation ceases.

BALBEC OR BALBEG the Balath of Scripture, and Heliopolis of the Greeks, a ruined town of Syria, formerly a city of great size and magnificence, situated on the lowest declivity of Anti-Libanus in a valley, opening into the plain of El-Bekaa, 43 m. N.W. Damascus, lat. 34° 1' 30" N., lon. 36° 11' E. Its remains, more extensive than those seen any where else in Syria, except at Palmyra, comprise three temples, two formed with immense stones, besides numerous columns, altars, and the vestiges of the city walls 3 to 4 m. in circuit. The date of its origin is lost in remote antiquity. A great temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected by Antoninus Pius. It continued a place of great importance down to the time of the Moslem invasion; was sacked in 748, and finally pillaged by Timur Bey in 1400. The present village, to the east of the ruins, has fallen greatly into decay, and contains about 2,000 inhabitants. Some of its ruined buildings were probably erected as late as the age of Hadrian or Antonine Pius; but others are evidently of a much earlier date, and answer to the account given of the "House of the Forest of Lebanon," built by Solomon. (1 Kings vii. 2-5, 8-12).

BABYLON, the earliest post-diluvian city, and the oldest in the world of which there are any traces remaining. Anciently the capital of the Babylonio-Chaldean empire, in an extensive plain on the Euphrates river, pass, and 60 m. S. Bagdad. The modern town Hilla occupies a portion of its site. Lat. 32° 28' 30" N., lon. 44° 9' 45" E. According to Herodotus, the walls of Babylon were 60 m. in circumference, 87 feet thick, and 350 feet high, built of brick, and containing 25 gates of brass, and 250 towers. The ruins of Babel-Nimrod on an elevated mount, are supposed to be the Tower of Babel of Scripture, and the Temple of Belus described by Herodotus. The base of this tower measures 2,082 feet in circumference; its remains, constructed of brick, are 28 feet in breadth. Babylon was at the height of its power in the time of Nebuchadnezzar. Was besieged and taken by Cyrus, B.C. 538, and afterwards by Alexander the Great. Out of its ruins four great capitals, besides other cities, were built. The most prominent of the remaining ruins are Babel-Nimrod, the Kasr on supposed site of palace of Nebuchadnezzar, and the Mojahiliah, on the river bank, 5 miles from Hilla.

In 1849 the entire population was estimated at 1,368,774.

The surface is mountainous, covered for four-fifths of its extent by the mass of the Schwarzwald (Black Forest), with the outcrops which extend from it; the Alp, the Heiligenberg, and the Bauden, are on the E., and on the S. the Schwarzwald, which bound the E. valley of the Rhine, from which they rise abruptly, and form a chain of plateaus gradually descending towards the N., and varying from 2,000 to 4,000 feet in elevation. The culminating points are the Feldberg, 4,893 feet; the Kandel, 4,180 feet; the Blauen, 3,932 feet. The Bauden, 2,600 feet; and the Kaiserstuhl, an isolated volcano near Briesach, 1,900 feet. The whole west part of the territory is a continuous plain, formed by the valley of the Rhine, and extending between it and the mountains from Basel to Mannheim. Principal rivers are the Rhine, which forms the E. and W. boundary of the state, the Murg, Kinzig, and Weissen-Mayn, Neckar, and Danube, which last rises in the grand duchy. The Lake of Constance forms part of the S.E. frontier, and there are several small lakes in the interior. The climate is mild in all the valley of the Rhine; rigorous in the mountain districts, the summits of which are only free from snow during the height of summer. The vine is cultivated at an elevation of 1,400 feet. The soil is generally fertile. Agriculture constitutes the chief wealth of the state. Barley, wheat, maize, potatoes, fine hemp, flax, and tobacco, are raised. The cultivation of fruit-trees is carried on, and fruit is grown in abundance. Great attention has been bestowed on improving the breeds of sheep, and cattle are extensively reared. Production of timber estimated at nearly 1,000,000 cubic fathoms annually; masts of 150 feet in length, and oak timber, are floated in rafts to the mouth of the Rhine. Mineral products comprise salt from springs, alum, vitriol, sulphur, coal, iron, copper, lead, and silver; gold-washing, formerly general along the Rhine, is now insignificant. Manufactures, weaving ribands and the production of beet-root sugar. Schwarzwald manns, comprise straw-plait, wooden ornaments, watches, clocks, jewellery, musical boxes, and organs. Exports timber, wine, corn, and Ahrdewasser, salt, linens, cottons, clocks, and paper. Imports colonial produce, drugs, wool, horses, fruits, iron and steel, silks, and articles of luxury. The accession of the duchy to the Prussian Customs' Union in 1835, has greatly increased the transit trade, which is favoured by the creation of free ports at Constance, etc., and by steam navigation on the Lake of Constance, the Rhine, Neckar, and Main. The lines of road are excellent, and a railway extends along the whole length of the territory from Basel to Mannheim, with branches to Kehl and Baden. Government exercised by the Grand Duke, a chamber of peers, and a chamber consisting of 22 deputies from towns, and 41 from rural districts. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but the reigning family is Protestant. The Grand Duchy possesses an excellent system of public instruction. In Baden education is compulsory, children being prohibited from being employed in factories until they have completed their eleventh year. In 1843 there was one school for every 677 of the pop. Heidelberg has a faculty for Lutheran, and Freiburg one for Catholic, theology. The former had, in 1847, 65 professors and 955 students, and the latter 219 students. The state has four public libraries. Circle judicial courts, subordinate to the supreme court at Mannheim, one held at Constance, Freiburg, Mannheim, and Rastadt. Public revenue (1853), 19,536,497 florins; expenditure 19,545,723 do.; public debt (1852), 52,584,316 do. The army amounts to 1,500 men.

It communicates with the Atlantic Ocean by Davis Strait on the S., with the Arctic Ocean by Lancaster Sound and Jones Sound on the W., and with the Polar Sea by Smith Sound on the N.

Its greatest depth is 6,890 feet, and the tides do not rise more than 10 feet. The surface of the sea is covered with ice during the greater part of the year, and can be navigated only during a short period in summer. The chief islands are those of Disco and Waigatz, on the coast of Greenland. The coasts, which are mountainous and barren, are deeply indented with gulfs.

Whale and seal fishing is followed. This sea was discovered by the English navigator Baffin, in 1616, while in search of a passage to the Pacific.

BAGDAD (PERSALIC or Chaldaea, Mesopotamia), an extensive region of Asiatic Turkey, of which it forms the S.E. portion, mostly between lat. 30° and 35° N., lon. 40° and 45° E., having N. the pashalics Diarbekir and Van, W. and S. Syria and Arabia, E. Persia, and at its S.E. extremity the Persian Gulf. Length from N.W. to S.E. 550 m. Breadth 350 m. The Euphrates and Tigris flow through the district for about 950 m., when both these rivers unite at Korna, in lat. 31° N., lon. 47° E. The united river, now called Shat-al-Arab, flows into the Persian Gulf. The country E. of the Tigris includes Koordistan and Khuzistan; the plains of the former are fertile, producing grain and fruit; the latter, though possessing a good soil, is almost a desert waste; it is, however, famed for its dates. The country to the W. of the Euphrates is a flat sandy desert, without water, and destitute of herbage, with the exception of the banks of the river, which are fertile. The lower part is healthy, producing abundant rice crops. That part of the district comprehended between the Tigris and Euphrates, consists of Al-Jedrah towards the N., a barren desert, and Irak Arabi, beginning where the two rivers approach near each other, to the N. of Bagdad, and extending to the Persian Gulf. The pop. of the pashalik is mixed, consisting of Arabs, Kurds, Turkomans, Armenians, Turks, Jews; some of whom, as the Arabs and Kurds, are but imperfectly subject to the Porte, and live under different chiefs often at war with each other. Principal cities, Bagdad, Bassorah, and Mosul. In this region may be traced the sites of the anc. Babylon, Nineveh, Ctesiphon, and Seleucia: the memorable field of Arbela, where Alexander finally broke the power of Darius, and many other localities famous in sacred and profane history, are within its limits.

BAGDAD, a city of Asiatic Turkey, cap. pash. of same name, and formerly of the Saracen caliphate, on the Tigris, 220 m. above where the united rivers enter the Persian Gulf. Lat. 33° 19' 50" N., lon. 44° 22' 45" E. Pop. 65,000, (?) mostly Arabs and Turks. It stands on both sides of the river, its two portions being connected by a bridge of boats; is enclosed by a brick and earthen wall, flanked with towers, and is 5 m. in circumference. A citadel, though of no great strength, here commands the passage of the Tigris. There are about 100 mosques, many of them with lofty domes and minarets. The bazars are large, and abound with most of the goods sold in European markets. Red and yellow leather, silks, and cotton stuffs are manufactured, and this city was long the great emporium of all the surrounding countries; but its commerce has declined since Persia has received European goods from the N. by way of Trebizond, and on the S. direct from India and the Persian Gulf. Bagdad has still, however, a large trade with Aleppo and Damascus, whence it imports cotton twist, calicoes, shirtings, prints, imitation shawls, dyes, and to which it exports tobacco, galls, buffalo hides, East India indigo, pearls, Cashmere shawls, and coffee. Its climate is generally healthy, but great heats during a part of the year oblige the inhabitants then to live underground. This city, built out of the ruins of Ctesiphon, was founded by Alhaznori in 763, and continued to flourish under succeeding caliphs, until sacked by Hoolagoo in 1258. It has been held by the Turks since 1638.

Area 19,200 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 10,710, chiefly composed of negroes. The Rio Hondo forms its N and N.W. boundary, and the Siboon its S.E. boundary. These, with the Balise which flows in the centre, are its principal rivers. Along the coast, the land is swampy, interior wooded, and soil of valley exceedingly fertile. Climate moist, but favourable to vegetation, and not unhealthy. Country well adapted for raising sugar, coffee, cotton, indigo. Mahogany, cedar, sarsaparilla, logwood, fustic, brasileto, and other dye woods are articles of export; wild animals, comprise birds, fish, and turtle is abundant. The possession of this colony was long disputed by the Spaniards, but finally yielded up to Great Britain in 1783. Governed by superintendent appointed by the crown, and seven magistrates elected by the people. Its cap. Belize, situated at the mouth of the river Balise, in the Bay of Honduras, has a pop. of 5,000, a government-house, barracks, a fort on a small island, a Gothic church, several chapels, schools, and court-house. The town is surrounded by cocoa-nut plantations. The river Balise, which has generally a N.E. course, is said to be navigable for 200 m. inland, and off its mouth is an anchorage for small vessels. Belize is the depot of British manufactured goods and foreign merchandise intended for Central America.

BALISE, a vill. of the U. S., North America, Louisiana, on the E. side of "the N.E. Pass," the mouth of the river Mississippi most frequented by European vessels. BALKAN, Hæmus, an important mountain chain of European Turkey, which extends from the plain of Sophia, lon. 23° E., to Cape Emineh on the Black Sea, forming a series of peaks of little elevation, the highest of which are covered with grass and fruit trees. Few of the peaks are distinguished by local names, and these are generally derived from the nearest towns. The name Kodja Balkan is limited to the portion of the ancient Hæmus, W. of the Balkan of Shipka. The W. part of the Great Balkan runs S.S.E. to N.N.W., and separates Bulgaria from Upper Moesia, on the N., whilst on the S. it serves to connect the Hæmus with Mount Rhodope. The chain in general is 4,900 feet in elevation, N.W. of Kalofer it rises to 5,325 feet. It slopes abruptly S. to the alluvial plain of Tartarabazardjik and Philippopolis, but terminates more gently on the N. by means of the crests of the Balkan of Estropol. Its waters flow chiefly in transverse valleys. Snow lies on the higher summits till the month of June, but entirely disappears in July. The E. part of the Balkan consists of a series of minor chains, decreasing in elevation as they approach the plains of the Danube on the N., and the Black Sea on the E. Mount Scardus, the sublimiting point of Tohar-dagh, is 9,700 feet. The Balkan is connected with the mountains of Middle Europe by the ranges of Monte Negro, Herzegovina, and the Dinaric Alps on the W., and the mountains of Greece on the S. The deep and narrow gorges permit of paths difficult for beasts of burden; and the range is traversed by only one great route, that of the gate of Trajan, by which the communication is kept up between Vienna and Constantinople.

BALTIC OR BALTI, Asia. [BALTIC.]

BALTIC PROVINCES, is the name applied to the Russian governments of Courland, Esthonia, Livonia, and St Petersburg, with the principality of Finland, situated on the Baltic Sea.

BALTIC OR EAST SEA, Mare Balticum (Germ. Ostsee), an extensive Mediterranean Sea of North Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, Mecklenburg, and Denmark, and communicating with the Kattegat and the North Sea by the Sound and the Great and Little Belts. It extends from Svinemünde in the S. to Tornea in the N. about 900 m., and from Carlsrona in the W. to Memel in the E. about 180 m., and its area, including the Gulf of Bothnia, occupies a space of about 125,000 square geographical miles. Notwithstanding its great extent the Baltic has all the characteristics of an inland sea or great lake. In proportion to its size, no sea has so great an influx of fresh water, hence it contains but little salt. In proportion to the North Sea this is found to be as 194 to 378. The N. part of the Baltic is generally called the Gulf of Bothnia; on the E. are the Gulfs of Finland and Riga, on the S.E. the Gulf of Danzig, and on the S.W. the Gulf of Lübeck. The depth of the Baltic on the W. is not more than 15 fathoms, and in general it is only from 8 to 10 fathoms deep; on the south it is nowhere more than 50 fathoms; but towards the N. it deepens to 100 fathoms. The Baltic receives the waters of the Motla-Elv, the Lakes of Mälar, Onega, and Ladoga, the Düna, Niemen, Vistula, and the Oder, besides numerous smaller streams. The great amount of sand and mud carried down by the rivers has considerably raised the bottom of this sea, and closed the mouths of many of its navigable streams, so that ships which formerly entered these rivers, must now be anchored at a distance from their mouths. This, together with the numerous islands, rocks, and sandbanks, and the gradual upward movement of the bed of the sea (at the rate of several feet in a century), renders navigation of the Baltic troublesome and dangerous. The chief islands of this sea are those of the Danish Archipelago, between the coasts of Jütland and Sweden; the islands of Rügen, Bornholm, Öland, Gotland, Dagö, and Oesel, the group of Åland and that of Holmön. The Baltic has no tides, or rather the effect of the tide is so little felt as not to be observable; but is subject to changes of level, depending on the winds, retarding or accelerating the passage of the water through the sound and the belts. Thus, during a N.E. wind the S.W. portion of the sea is often raised as much as four feet above the usual level of the North Sea. This has led to the erroneous opinion that the Baltic is always higher than the German Ocean; on the contrary, after N.W. gales and during spring tides, the Atlantic rises, and pouring a flood into the Baltic, commits great havoc among the islands of the Danish Archipelago. The great amount of water which flows into the Baltic, especially during the melting of the snow in spring, occasions a general current in the direction of the ocean; and it has been calculated that the number of days in which the water flows into the Kattegat, is in proportion to those in which it follows in an opposite direction, as 24 to 1. During winter this sea is usually frozen to a greater or less distance along the coasts; and in severe winters, not only the sound and the belts, but a great part of its surface is covered with ice. In the reign of King Christopher (1394) the Baltic was frozen so hard, that for six weeks the people travelled between Denmark and Germany on the ice. The Baltic contains abundance of fish, and a quantity of amber is gathered on its S. shores. Chief ports are St Petersburg, Riga, Königsberg, Danzig, Stralsund, Lübeck, Copenhagen, Carlsrona, Stockholm, and Christiania.

The E part of the territory lies between the Alps and the mtns of Central Germany, occupying the basin of the Danube, which river traverses it for a space of 180 m, and in that part of its course receives on the right, the Iller, the Lech, the Isar, and the Inn, and on the left, the Kocher, the Wörnitz, the Altmühl, the Naab, the Regen, and the Ilz. A small part of the N C of Bavaria belongs to the basin of the Elbe, and is watered by the Eger and the Saale. All the N part of the principal territory is drained by the Main, which has its source in the kingdom, and receives the Tauber, the Rodach, the Saale (of Franconia), and the Regnitz. Rhenish Bavaria belongs exclusively to the basin of the Rhine, which forms its E boundary, it is watered by the Lauter, the Queich, and the Nahe. A small portion of the Lake of Constance belongs to Bavaria, its other principal lakes form a chain along the N slope of the Alps, they are the Ammer See, in the bed of the river of the same name, the Wurm See on an aff. of the Ammer, and the Chiem See, formed by the river Aiz. Its smaller lakes are the Staffell-See, Kochel See, Walchen See, and Königs-See. The country is in general elevated and mountainous, the Alps, on the S, have, in the Zugspitze, an elev. of 10,150 feet. The highest points of the Bohmerwald, on the E, between Bavaria and Bohemia, are Arber, 4,615 feet, and Rachelberg, 4,561 feet. Its most remarkable off set is the Bayerischer wald, between the Danube and Regen. The other principal chains are the Fichtelgebirge, on the N E in which the Schneeb. is 3,481 feet in elevation. This range is connected on the N W with the Thüringer-wald, and on the N E with the Fichtelgebirge. The Franconian Jura is a branch of the Fichtelgebirge, which extends S between the Regnitz and the Vils. The northernmost chain of Bavaria is the Rhöngebirge, culminating point the Kreuzberg, 3,000 feet in elevation. S W of this is the Spessart, an off. of the Odenwald, in which the Hohewart is 1,968 feet in elevation. In Rhenish Bavaria the chief mountain is the Harz, the culminating point of which, the Donnersberg, is 2,900 feet in elevation. The principal plains are the Donau-moos, on the S of the Danube, between the Lech and the Paar. The valley of the Lech, above and below Augsburg, and that of the Isar, between Munich and Freising. The climate is temperate and healthy, although on account of the general elevation of the surface, it is colder than other countries of Germany situated farther northward. The soil is among the most fertile in Central Europe, the mtns yield excellent pasturage, and are covered with forests of valuable timber. Grain is cultivated to an elevation of 3,230 feet, forests reach to 5,809 feet, and grazing extends to 5,500 feet, or the line of perpetual snow, which occurs only on the higher Alps. The wealth of the country consists almost entirely in its agricultural produce. Besides the ordinary kinds of grain, a small quantity of buckwheat and maize is cultivated. The wines of Franconia, in the valleys of the Main, the Saale and the Tauber, are much esteemed, especially those called Silvaner and Leutener, from the banks of the Leiste, near Starnberg. Rhenish Bavaria also produces excellent wine. The hops are esteemed for their excellent quality. Fruit is cultivated in considerable quantities, as well as hemp, flax, linseed, beet-root, and liquorice. Cattle rearing is the exclusive industry of the inhabitants of the Alps, sheep are of great importance in Mittelfranken, and pigs and goats are reared in Unterfranken. The rearing of silkworms has been introduced. Although the soils are rich in useful minerals, they have never been extensively worked. Salt, coal, and iron, are the principal products. Salt, which is a government monopoly, is produced by evaporation, and from the rich mines of Berchtesgaden, Reichenhall, Transtum, Rosenheim, Kissingen, Soden, Orb, Duckheim, and Philippthal. Iron is worked everywhere throughout the territory. Small quantities of copper, manganese, cobalt, and mercury, are produced in Rhenish Bavaria. There are numerous quarries of marble, alabaster, gypsum, building stones, and porcelain clay. Among the many mineral springs with establishments of baths, the most frequented are those of Kissingen, Bruckenan, and Rosenheim. Manufacturing industry is but little developed. Linen weaving is carried on to a considerable extent, woollen and cotton are not manufactured in sufficient quantity for home consumption. The other manufactures are tanning, paper-making, working in wood and straw, hard-ware, beet root sugar, tobacco, and porcelain, jewellery, mathematical and optical instruments, toys, and wooden clocks, porcelain of the royal manuf. of Nymphenburg, and the potteries of Deggendorf and Hafnerzell, called "Pottery of Passau". The exports are estimated at about 1,230,000l annually, and consist of grain, timber, wine, cattle, salt, hides, wool, hops, fruits, and fruit-trees, liquorice, madder, butter, cheese, glass, and jewellery. The chief imports are cotton, sugar, coffee, and other colonial products, silks and woollen fabrics of fine qualities. Bavaria possesses the transit trade between North Germany and Austria, Switzerland and Italy. The following are the lines of railway in operation — Nürnberg to Fürth, 5 m, Munich to Augsburg, 32 m, Augsburg to Donauwörth, 27 m, Nürnberg to Bamberg, 39 m, Augsburg to Landau on the Lake of Constance, 80 m, Donauwörth to Nürnberg, 55 m and Augsburg to Ulm, 45 m, Munich to Kufstein, 50 m. The routes of navigation are the Danube, the Rhine, and the Main, traversed by steam packets. The other navigable rivers are the Inn, the Salzach, Regnitz, and Altmühl. The chief floatable rivers are the Wense Main, the Rodach, the Iller, Lech, Wertach, Isar, and Loosach. Canals are not extensive, but one of them, the Leudwigs Kanal, connecting the Rhine and the Danube, is likely to become one of the most important in Europe (ALTMÜHL). Among the establishments most favourable to commerce are the exchange banks of Nürnberg, Ansbach, and Munich. Bavaria joined the Zoll-Veren (Prussian commercial Union) in 1833.

Bavaria is a kingdom, and its form of government is a constitutional monarchy. The throne is hereditary in the male line. The constitution dates from 26th May 1818, and no change can take place without the concurrence of the national states. The executive power belongs to the king; the ministers and all functionaries are responsible. The legislative functions are exercised concurrently by the king and the two chambers of the national states, but the royal prerogative is extensive. Public revenue for the financial period 1851 to 1855, estimated at 34,785,685 florins per annum. Expenditure, including interest of debt, 37,826,516 florins. The kingdom is divided into 2 Catholic archbishoprics, those of München and Bamberg; 6 bishoprics, 171 deaneries, and 2,786 parishes. The direction of the Protestant religion is under a general consistory (Ober-consistorium), and 4 prov. consistories, at Bayreuth, Kreuz-Wertheim, and Spira. The proportion of the different sects was, in 1840, Catholics, 3,067,990; Lutherans and Reformers, 1,183,939; Jews, 59,288; minor sects, 4,836. Public instruction is more limited in Bavaria than in several other German states; it has, however, been improved of late. Its direction is under the minister of the interior. Elementary schools (Volksschule) exist in all the parishes, and attendance on them is obligatory for children till the age of 14; and after leaving them they are bound for two years more to attend a Sabbath school. The kingdom possesses 3 universities, 2 of which (München and Würzburg) are Catholic, and 1 (Erlangen) Protestant. Its universities are well attended by both natives and foreigners. In 1847 the University of München had 76 professors, and 1,471 students, of whom 125 were foreigners; in 1846-7, Würzburg had 631 students, 72 of whom were foreigners; and Erlangen had, at same date, 864 students, of whom 7 were foreigners. Besides elementary schools, Bavaria has a school of forests at Aschaffenburg; a school of husbandry (landwirthschaft) at Schleissheim; a mining school at Steben, a seminary for students, 9 lycæums, 26 gymnasiums, 60 Latin schools, 9 normal schools, 3 polytechnic schools, a royal school of architecture, a school of trades, 22 schools of rural industry, 1 blind, and 1 deaf-mute school. The capital possesses scientific and literary institutions, and collections of art among the most extensive in Europe, besides important academies and national societies. [MÜNCHEN—MUNICH.]

The armed force of the kingdom comprises the permanent army, the army of reserve, and the militia (Landwehr). Every male, without exception, is liable to serve; but the sons of the nobility have the privilege of entering the military school of cadets. The army is raised by conscription, and the period of service is four years, from the age of 21 to 25. The permanent army, in time of peace, amounts to 78,322 men, besides 4 companies of veterans, of whom about one-third are usually under arms. In case of war, depôts are formed for infantry and cavalry. The Landwehr is organized and armed in two levies.

Total . . .	11,813	4,329,060	—

Surface in the N. and W. uniformly flat or slightly undulating. The coasts are low and protected against the encroachments of the sea by dykes and sand dunes, as in Holland—though no part of Flanders is below the sea-level. The centre is undulating, and the S. and E. provs. are mountainous, being traversed by the Ardennes mountains, which enclose the valley of the Meuse, and separate its basin from that of the Moselle, rising to 2,900 feet in elevation. The whole territory belongs to the basin of the German Ocean, and is well watered. Chief rivers the Meuse (Mosa) and Scheldt, with the Ruppel, Demer, Senne, Dendre, the Haine, Durme, and the Lys, tributary to the latter; and the Ourthe, Vesdre, Ambrove, Mark, Dommel, Geer, Meuhaigne, and Sambre, affluents of the former. Climate humid and cool; unhealthy in the low parts of Flanders and in the prov. of Antwerp. Mean temperature of 7 years at Brussels, 50° 4'; extreme heat 91° 6'; extreme cold minus 3° Fahr.; prevailing wind S.W. The soil is in general fertile, especially so in Flanders; sandy and sterile in great part of the provs. Antwerp and Luxembourg. In the mountainous regions the riches consist in forests and mineral products. The yield of corn is double what is required for home consumption. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, and buck-wheat are cultivated. Potatoes, oil-seeds, madder, flax, and hemp are grown in Flanders; hops, beet-root, chicory, and tobacco are raised in the central provs. Only some inferior kinds of wine are produced on the banks of the Meuse. Horticulture is an important branch of industry. Horned cattle are numerous in Flanders. From 7,000 to 10,000 Flemish draught horses, and about 2,500 colts, are annually exported, principally to France and the Prussian dominions. The government has taken great care to improve the road and saddle horses, by crossings with English breeds. English sheep have been imported to improve the native races; but their number is inconsiderable. Pigs are reared in the forest regions, and the rearing of the silk-worm was established in 1826. Mining is extensively pursued.

In 1837 there were in the country 323 mines, occupying, or extending under, more than 640 sq. m.; the products are iron, coal, copper, zinc, marble, slate, and stone. Iron is abundant in the countries between the Sambre, Meuse, Liège, and Luxembourg. In the province of Liège the average annual produce was, in 1836, 150,000 tons of iron. Here are 69 smelting furnaces, 175 iron forges, and a royal cannon foundry. Mons, Charleroi, and Liège are the great centres of the coal trade. In 1845 it is estimated that 4,980,077 tons of coal were raised (value 1,680,000). Copper and lead are deficient, but the mines of Moresnet (Liège) furnish more than half the zinc used in Europe. Fishing in the open sea and on the coasts occupies about 300 boats belonging to the ports of Antwerp, Ostend, Blankenbergh, and Nieuport. Ostend is the principal port for the herring fishery. Manufacts. consist of cottons, woollens, linens, carpets, silks, lace, embroidery, ribbons, hosiery, hats, leather, paper, oil-cloth, hair, and caoutchouc articles, cabinet-making, printing, lithography, and bookbinding. Steam engines are built at Liège, Brussels, Charleroi, Tirlemont, and Bruges; nail-making employs from 12,000 to 18,000 hands; firearms are made at Liège, and exported to Brazil, Germany, Italy, Spain, and the East; and cutlery is manufactured in Namur, Brussels, and Ghent. Next to these, the most important manufactures are leather, paper, glass, and porcelain, beet-root sugar, salt, chemical goods, bronze ware, scientific and musical instruments, hardware, and jewellery. The railway system, which is very complete, originated in a law of 1st March 1834, the works were executed by the government; they centre in Mechlin, diverging N. to the Scheldt, E. to the Prussian frontier, S. to the French frontier, and W. to the German Ocean. In 1858, 813 m. of railway was open. The whole territory is intersected by canals, many of which admit merchant vessels. In 1851 the general imports into Belgium amounted in value to 241,059,000 fr. They comprised coffee, cotton, wool, hides, salt, raw sugar, tobacco, woollen and silk stuffs, wines, timber, cattle, indigo, resins, and metals. Exports in same year, to the value of 258,538,000 fr., consisted in hempen and linen cloths, glass ware, refined sugar, corn, cattle, skins, woollen fabrics, iron and nails, oil, seeds, flax, and machinery. A considerable amount of the foreign merchandize imported passes through the country into Germany. Government is a constitutional monarchy, based on the broadest principles of rational liberty. The sovereignty is hereditary, except in failure of heirs male; the senate and the house of representatives are both elected by the people. Punishment of death has been abolished; universal toleration, freedom of the press, and trial by jury are established. The pop. is almost entirely Roman Catholic, but the king is Protestant; the clergy of all sects are supported by the state. Each prov. has its governor, a council of from 50 to 70 members, and court of assize; and in most of the large manufacturing towns is now a council des prud'hommes. Each arrond. has a court of primary jurisdiction, and each canton a police tribunal. Courts of appeal are established in Brussels, Ghent, and Liège; and the whole are subordinate to a court of cassation in Brussels. The kingdom has 4 universities, the seats of which are Ghent, Liège, Louvain, and Brussels; in most of the cities are diocesan seminaries; in many high schools, termed gymnasies; and fourteen public libraries. The compulsory system of education is forced under the Dutch rule was abolished in 1830, and education is now under the control of the priests. The average attendance of pupils, according to the census of 1846, was, for the whole kingdom, 1 in 9 of the population; in Namur and Luxembourg, 1 in 7; and in West Flanders 1 in 13. Each commune has its bureau of charity for the relief of the poor, and hospitals and asylums are established in the principal cities and towns. Belgium has 22 fortified places; the armed force in 1853 amounted to 100,000 men. Public rev. (1853), 123,224,250 fr.; expenditure, 132,708,216 fr. Belgium successively formed part of the doms. of Austria and Spain from the 15th century until 1796, when it was conquered by the French. It remained annexed to Holland from 1815 to 1830, in the autumn of which year it acquired its independence, after a revolution of a very few days.

Is strongly fortified. The citadel, occupied by the Turkish pasha and troops, is on the tongue of land between the rivers, behind which rises the city proper, with a cathedral and palace. The Turkish quarter slopes down to the Danube; the Serbian quarter, with the custom-house and consular residence, borders on the Save. Belgrade had formerly an oriental appearance, but churches are superseding mosques; and the bazaars have now glazed shop-windows. Manufs. of arms, carpets, silk goods, cutlery, and saddlery; with a port, a general trade, a lyceum, and schools; it is the entrepôt of commerce between Turkey and Austria, and the seat of the principal authorities of Servia. It was taken by the Turks, under Solymán II., in 1522; and re-taken by Prince Eugene in 1717. It was partly ruined during the Serbian insurrection in 1813, and its repair was commenced by the Porte in 1830.

BELLOCHISTAN (Gedrosia, and the countries of the Orta, Iekthyopagi, etc.), an extensive country of Southern Asia, forming the S.E. part of the old dom. of Persia, between lat. 24° 50' and 30° 20' N., lon. 57° 40' and 69° 18' E.; having E. Scinde, N. Afghanistan, N.W. and W. the Persian Desert; and extending on the S. for 600 m. along the shores of the Indian Ocean. Estimated area 180,000 sq. m. Pop. 480,000. Is subdivided into the 6 provs. of Kelat, Sarawan, Cutch-Gundava, Jhalawan, Lus, and Mekran. Nearly the whole country is mountainous, except in the N.W. and along the coast, its general characteristics being a rugged and elevated surface, barrenness, and deficiency of water. Its mountains in the E. are connected with those of South Afghanistan, and rise to considerable elevation; the Bolan Pass, and even the bottom of some valleys are upwards of 5,700 feet in height, and the cap. Kelat is 6,000 feet, above the sea. In the N., the peak of Tak-katoo is considered to have an elevation of 11,000 feet. The rivers are insignificant, except after heavy rains; the largest, the Indus, though supposed to have a course of 1,000 m., has been found at its mouth only 20 inches deep, and 20 yards in width. The climate is varied, being cold in the elevated parts, and hot in the valleys. In the low and watered plains of Cutch-Gundava and Lus, rice and sugar-cane, with cotton, indigo, and tobacco are raised; in other parts, wheat, barley, madder, and pulses, with European fruits, melons, pomegranates, rhubarb, and assafoetida are the principal products; on some of the mountain sides, the tamarisk and babool attain the size of large trees. In the wide sandy desert of Mekran, where the returning army of Alexander the Great suffered its severest hardships, the date is the only valuable product. Pastures are poor, and cattle few; but a good many sheep and goats are kept, the pursuits of the people being pastoral. The Bactrian (or two-humped) camel, and the dromedary, are used as beasts of burden; in the N.W. some horses are bred. The strata about Kelat and Moostung, as well as other explored localities, consists of secondary limestone, sandstone, and conglomerates; and the N.W. extremity shows indication of volcanic action. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, antimony, iron, sulphur, alum, and sal-ammoniac. Prepared skins, woollen felt and cloths, carpets and tent-covers of goats' or camels' hair, and rude firearms, are the manufactured products. Trade comparatively small, and almost monopolized by Hindoos. Sommeance is the only seaport; its custom dues were, in 1840, farmed for 3,400. Principal exports, butter or ghee, hides, wool, drugs, dried fruits, fish, corn, and vegetable oil; imports, British and Indian muscins, rice, spices, dye-stuffs, and slaves for Muscat. The

pop. consists mainly of Belooches and Brahooes, two races very different in personal appearance, but both Mohammedans of the Sunnite creed, and subdivided into numerous tribes or clans. Most of the E. provs. are under the uncertain authority of the khan of Kelat, whose revenue is estimated at 30,000*l.* annually, and his armed force at 3,000 men. A late khan of Kelat having acted treacherously toward the British, during their advance into Afghanistan in 1839, his cap. was stormed and taken in that year. In the following year it changed hands, and was again captured and temporarily held by the British in 1841.

The greater proportion of this territory consists of the immense plain or valley of the Ganges. To the N. this plain rises into the mountainous region of Kumaon, and on the S. are the Vindhyan mts., and the table-land of Central India. The river Ganges flows in a S.E. direction, through the whole extent of the presidency, and is joined in its course by numerous tributaries, of which the Jumna, Chambul, Goggra, Gunduck and Sone, are the most considerable. The eastern division of the country is traversed by the Brahmaputra, which discharges its waters into the Bay of Bengal, near the confluence of the Ganges. Both these rivers divide into numerous branches before reaching the sea, and their united deltas form a tract of rich alluvial soil, exceeding 30,000 sq. m. There are no inland lakes, but numerous lagoons and marshes, especially in the lower dists. The surface of the country generally exhibits a deep clay alluvium, interspersed with sandy tracts, with tertiary deposits in some localities. Approaching the Himalayan range to the N., are granitic and porphyritic rocks, with secondary limestone and sandstones; N.W. are basaltic and greenstone rocks. The Vindhyan and Garrow chains of mountains are of volcanic origin. Nitre is found in great quantities in Bahar, as well as common salt, both of which are largely exported. Salt is a government monopoly, and in 1841 its sale realized 1,225,000*l*. Diamonds are found in a conglomerate in Bundelcund; and gold dust and silver in some of the rivers. Coal and iron are found in Sylhet and Burdwan. Climate varies exceedingly according to elevation. The mean annual temperature of the plains is from 78° to 79°; for Calcutta, 90°; Bhaugulpore, 96°, and Agra, 102°; on the mountains the temperature is, at Darjeeling, 60°, and Sylhet, 88°; the mean maximum, 73° Fahr. During the winter months in Kumaon there is frost and snow. In Bengal, the rainy season commences in June, and continues till the middle of October. The annual fall of rain in Central Bengal and the Deccan, is 36 inches; at Calcutta, 61; Benares, 41; Agra, 20; Delhi, 20 inches. At Darjeeling, it is 123; and at Cherrapunji, 610 inches. The winter or cold season, lasts from November to middle of February, when the hot season begins, and continues till the middle of June. During the rainy season the lower provinces especially are overflowed by the Ganges and its tributaries. Hence these dists. are highly favourable to the cultivation of rice, which is here the principal product of the soil. In the upper districts, wheat and barley are the principal crops. Indigo is largely cultivated from Dacca to Delhi, there being upwards of 400 indigo factories in the presidency. Its culture occupies more than 1,000,000 of acres, and its annual produce is estimated to be worth from 2,000,000*l*. to 3,000,000*l*., half of which amount is yearly expended in its production. Opium is a government monopoly, and is cultivated only in Bahar and Benares, where the produce is considered equal, if not superior, to the opium of Malwah. Cotton is a staple crop; and the soil in Benares is capable of producing sugar equal to that of the West Indies. Coffee, pepper, and tobacco are raised, and most of the spice and fruit trees of Asia, have been acclimated somewhere in this region. The forests contain teak, sal, masu, banyan, ebony, oak, and pine timber, with rattans, bamboos, coconuts, areca, and other palms. A great quantity of silk is produced in Bengal-proper, between lat. 22° and 28°, lon. 86° and 90°. Elephants' teeth, and hides of various kinds form important articles of trade. Nitre is obtained principally in Bahar province. Muslins, cotton piece goods, diaper, pack-thread, sail-cloth, chintzes, silks, calicoes, blanketing, and other woven goods, are staple manufactures; but, of late years, they have begun to be superseded by fabrics from Europe. [For exports and imports see CALCUTTA.] The gov. is vested in the Governor-General of India, and a council of five members, three appointed by the East India Company, a fourth also appointed by the Company, but not one of their number, and the fifth the Commander-in-chief. The upper provs. are under a lieutenant-gov. at Agra, subordinate to the Gov.-General at Calcutta. In each district or collectorate is a judge, empowered to decide appeals originating in the district, and to try civil suits to the amount of 2,000*l*. Superior to these tribunals are courts of appeal in Calcutta, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Patna, Benares, and Bareilly; and a supreme court sits in Calcutta, from which there is appeal only to the British sovereign in council. In the upper provs. the land rev. is collected for the government by officers appointed under the native village system of India; in the lower provs. the zemindars, or hereditary tax-collectors, constituted proprietors of the soil by Lord Cornwallis' Act, account to the gov. for 8-10ths of the sums they collect as rent, and reserve the remaining 1-10th for their own remuneration. [IRNIA.] Schools for the natives have been established by government throughout the presidency, and colleges at Calcutta, Delhi, Agra, Benares, besides several missionary stations and schools for the religious instruction of the natives. English is taught in all the schools, and is highly valued by the natives. The pop. of this presid. embraces a great variety of races—Hindoes of all castes, Moguls, Mah rattas, Sikhs, Rajpoots, peculiar wild tribes in Gundwanah, and Bhagulpore; and beyond the Brahmaputra, Mughs, Garrows, and other races differing widely from those of Western Asia. The prevailing religions are the Brahminical and Mohammedan; Buddhism is confined to the countries E. of the Brahmaputra; and the hill tribes have rude paganisms of their own. The Protestant Episcopalian Church consists of an archdeacon and about forty chaplains, subordinate to the bishop of Calcutta; there is also a small establishment for the Scotch kirk. The Roman Catholic establishment is under the vicerey apostolic of Agra, and a legate at Calcutta, both subordinate to the Roman Catholic bishop at Madras. Public rev. is derived from the land-tax, and subsidies from protected native states; mint, post-office, stamp, and excise duties; a house-tax in Calcutta, judicial fees and fines, sayer and abakry duties, customs, pilotage, monopoly of salt and opium. Total receipts (1842-3), 9,445,818*l*.; expenditure, 1,628,761*l*.; net rev., 7,817,057*l*. Principal cities, Calcutta, the cap. of British India; Delhi, the Mohammedan cap.; Benares, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Bahar, Patna, Allahabad, and Agra. Calcutta was erected into a presid. separate from Madras in 1707; in 1765, the English acquired by treaty the sovereignty over the provs. Bengal, Bahar, and a part of Orissa; and in 1773, the residence of the Governor-General of India was fixed in Bengal. The principal accessions of territory since have been Benares, in 1775; Oude dists., 1801; Delhi territory, 1805; Kumaon, 1815; S. W. (Nerbudda) dists., 1815; Singapore and Malacca, 1824; and the Berar dists. and Burmese ceded provs. in 1826 and 1862.—Bengal Provinces, one of the largest and most important of the old Mohammedan provs. of Hindostan, between lat. 21° and 27° N., lon. 87° and 92° E. It comprises the delta of the Ganges, with the lower course of the Brahmaputra, and is traversed by numerous other rivers, its surface being mostly a dead level. It is wholly included in the British dom., and forms, under the above presidency, the divisions of its three principal cities, Calcutta, Moorshedabad, and Dacca, which are subdivided into numerous subordinate districts.

Pop. in 1700, 29,000; in 1858 451,871. Built in a sandy plain, on both banks of the Spree; is 10 m. in circumference; occupies an extent of 6,900 acres. The chief divisions of the city are—1. Berlin Proper; 2. Cologne (Alt and Neu Köln), on the Spree; 3. Louisenstadt, in the S.; 4. Friedrichstadt, in S.W.; 5. Friedrichswerder, between Alt and Neu Köln and Friedrichstadt; 6. Neustadt or Dorotheenstadt, between Friedrichstadt and the Spree; 7. Friedrich Wilhelmstadt, built 1828, and the suburbs of Stralau, Spandau, and Königsstadt, Oranienburg, and Potsdam. The city is surrounded by a wall 16 feet high, and is entered by 16 gates, one of which the Brandenburg gate on the W., is a colossal structure, surmounted by a victory, in a car drawn by 4 horses. It was carried to Paris in 1807, and restored in 1814. Of the 40 bridges which cross the Spree and its branches, the principal are the long bridge, with an equestrian statue of the great elector Frederick William; the Schlossbrücke or palace bridge, with groups of heroes in marble; Frederik Bridge, consisting of 3 arches, and constructed of iron. The finest streets are in Friedrichstadt and Dorotheenstadt; the most celebrated is that called "Unter-der-Linden," ornamented by an equestrian statue of Frederick the Great, terminated by the Brandenburg gate at the one end, and the royal palace at the other. Around the principal squares and streets are grouped numerous public buildings, among which are the royal castle and palace, the arsenal, university, museums, exchange, opera-house, theatres, and the palaces of the princes. There are 33 churches of which 23 are evangelical, 4 French Calvinist, 2 Roman Catholic, and a chapel of the Bohemian Brothers. The suburbs have many attractions, among which are the Thier-garten, a large open park outside of the Brandenburg gate, in which a "corso" has been established, and the Kreuzberg, a sandhill, S. of the gate of Halle, on which is erected an iron monument to the memory of the Prussians who fell in the wars of Napoleon 1. Berlin is the great centre of instruction and intellectual development in North Germany; its educational establishments are numerous and celebrated. The university, founded in 1609, and comprising schools of jurisprudence, medicine, and philosophy, is attended by about 1,900 students. There are 6 gymnasia, 2 Protestant theological seminaries, a military school, schools of artillery, military engineering, architecture, sculpture, painting, and music; a preparatory school of music, and many elementary schools. Has extensive public libraries, among which the royal library, founded in 1650, has 500,000 printed vols. and 500 MSS. Among its valuable collections are royal museums of painting, sculpture, antiquities, coins, and medals; a museum of natural history, a royal astronomical and magnetic observatory, and a royal botanic garden. Its academic institutions comprise the academies of sciences (Akademie der Wissenschaften), of the fine arts, for the encouragement of industry, and of music; a geographical society, founded in 1808; and a society of natural history. Has two royal theatres, and an opera house. Among its charitable institutions are the Hôtel des Invalides, for 800 soldiers and 12 officers, and an orphan hospital. Berlin is the first city in Germany for the variety and importance of its manufs. The articles of industry are cloths, linens, carpets, silks, ribbons, and printed cottons, iron wares, especially the beautiful cast-iron articles called "Berlin jewellery," paper, porcelain, mathematical and optical instruments, chemical and dyestuffs, including the celebrated "Prussian blue," and musical instruments. Among its great industrial establishments are the royal iron foundry and royal porcelain manufactory. The productions of the press in typography, cartography, and lithography, are numerous and excellent. For the encouragement of commerce there is a royal bank, a royal mercantile marine (Seehandlungs-institute), established 1772, and steam-packet companies. All the great roads in the kingdom meet in Berlin; its position, on a navigable river, communicating by canals with the Elbe, Oder, and Vistula, renders its navigation of considerable importance; and is the centre of a system of railways which connect it with the Baltic by Hamburg and Kiel, on the N.W., and by Stettin on the N.E. On the S.E. a line extends by Breslau to Vienna, on the S. to Leipzig and Dresden, and on the W. to Magdeburg and Hanover. The lakes of Neuchâtel and Biennne are formed by the Thiele, and those of Thun and Brienz by the Aar. Climate healthy; excessively cold in the region of the Alps, where the perpetual snow forms the most extensive glaciers in Switzerland, but mild at the foot of the Jura, and in the valley of Interlaken. The mountains are covered with forests of pine and beech, and the soil is fertile in the valleys. The amount of grain, potatoes, hemp, and flax, is insufficient for consumption. The vine is cultivated to a considerable extent in the valleys of the Thiele, and on the Lakes Neuchâtel, Biennne, and Thun. Pasturage extensive, and the rearing of cattle is the chief source of wealth; those of the valleys of the Emmen and Sarine being considered the best in Switzerland; and the cheese there produced is one of the chief articles of commerce in the canton. The horses of the Emmenthal are highly valued. The canton has mines of iron, lead, and copper, marble and gypsum quarries, fine freestone, granite, and lime. Iron is worked extensively in the Jura. Among the many mineral springs, those of Weissenburg, Blumenstein, Frutigen, and Gurnigel, are most frequented. Chief objects of industry are the manufs. of linens and woollens, iron and copper wares, watchmaking, and the wooden wares of the Oberland. Chief imports are salt, colonial products, grain, tobacco, and metals. The canton is traversed by excellent roads, and steam packets ply on the lakes, and on the river Aar. The educational establishments of the canton are numerous, comprising a university, polytechnic and normal schools, and the agricultural and industrial institution at Hofwyl. Bern is the largest canton of the Swiss Confederation, and holds the second rank in the federal diet. Its contingent to the army is 5,824 men.

BERNARD (GREAT ST.), Mons Jovis, a remarkable mountain pass in the chain of the Alps, between Piedmont and the Valais. It owes its modern name to the celebrity of the hospice, said to have been founded by Bernard de Menthon, in 862, for the succour of travellers, who have been assisted to the number of 600 in one day. The hospice, a stone building, is situated on the summit of the pass, 11 m. N.N.W. Aosta, and 17 m. S.S.E. Martigny, at an elevation of 8,150 feet above the level of the sea. It is the highest habitation in Europe; and the cold is so intense, that a small lake in its vicinity is frozen over nine months in the year. At all times, the philanthropic inmates, monks of the order of St Augustine, with their valuable dogs, hold themselves in readiness to assist travellers arrested by snow, which in winter accumulates to a depth of from 10 to 40 feet. This gorge, which was traversed by Roman armies, by Charlemagne, and by Frederick Barbarossa, is celebrated for the passage of Bonaparte I., at the head of the French army of 30,000 men, with cavalry and artillery. 17th to 21st May 1800. BIRMINGHAM, a parl. and municipal bor., one of the principal manufacturing towns of England, near its centre, co. and 17 m. N.W. Warwick, 100 m. N.W. London, and 78½ m. S.E. Liverpool. Area of borough, which includes the adjacent townships, Aston and Edgbaston, 18,780 acres. Pop. in 1690, 4,000; in 1801, 60,822; in 1851, 232,841. The town, on the river Rea, occupies the E. declivity of three undulating hills. In its centre is a handsome quarter, containing the town-hall, the grammar school of Edward VI., St Philip's and Christ's churches, Queen's college, theatre, and other edifices. The uneven ground on which the town is built, facilitates its drainage, and thus contributes to its salubrity. The superb town-hall occupies a commanding site, and is in classic style; it is fronted with marble, and has a saloon 145 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, and the same in height; it can accommodate 6,000 persons standing (or 4,000 seated), and has a fine organ; in this hall the triennial musical festivals are held. The free grammar school, founded in 1552, is a richly decorated Gothic edifice, rebuilt in 1834, at a cost of nearly 50,000*l.*; it has a revenue, now probably amounting to 11,000*l.* a year. Queen's College, lately established, and munificently endowed by private benefactions, is in connection with the University of London, and regulated on the old collegiate system; attached to it are a medical school and Queen's hospital, also recently founded. Birmingham originally consisted of but one pa.; it is now divided into five.—St Martin, St Philip, St Thomas, St George, and All Saints. St Martin's church, in the Bull-ring, lower part of the town, was built in the 8th century. There are several other chapels belonging to the establishment. These parishes were formerly within the archbishopric of Lichfield and Coventry, but were transferred by the church commissioners to the diocese of Worcester. Dissenting chapels comprise those of Independents, Friends, Methodists, Swedenborgians, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians, and here is a Jews' synagogue. Other principal buildings are—a general hospital, general dispensary, atheneum, market-house, Roman Catholic cathedral; the barracks and railway station, which last is a general point of junction of railways from London, Liverpool, Derby, Worcester, &c. Public institutions comprise a society of arts, with a drawing academy, and annual exhibition of paintings; public librery; philosophic and mechanic institutions; Springhill college, for Independents and Baptists; national and proprietary schools, and a great variety of other educational establishments; deaf-mute, and Magdalen asylums; eye and ear, and lying-in infirmaries; a botanic garden; horticultural and statistical societies, and a public cemetery company. The town has extensive baths, and a place of amusement termed "Vauxhall." Birmingham has made rapid progress in manufacturing industry within the present century. Its manufactures comprise almost every description of iron and steel goods, brass and iron founding, saddlery, firearms, cutlery, gold, silver, plated, bronze, or-molu, and japanned wares; papier-mâché goods, toys, jewellery, electro-plated goods, buttons, steel-pens, glass, tools, steam-engines, and all kinds of machinery. In 1849, the steam-engines employed in its factories, were supposed to have an aggregate power of 5,400 horses, and to consume 377 tons of coals daily, and the annual value of manufactures has been estimated at 4,000,000*l.* Among the manufacturing establishments, is the steam-engine factory at Soho, the largest in the world, and with which the name of the celebrated Watt is associated. Wages are higher in Birmingham than in most of the manufacturing towns of the North of England; and the condition of its artisans is in favourable contrast to that exhibited at many other places, both as to health and prosperity. It is computed that 20,000 families are employed in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; and a few years ago, upwards of 40,000 of its inhabitants were members of friendly societies. The immense coal and iron beds of the district by which Birmingham is surrounded, may be viewed as the main source of its manufacturing prosperity, which has also been greatly aided by canals, communicating with the Thames, Severn, Mersey, Trent, and Humber, and more recently by railways, which brings London, and all the great towns of the North of England, within a few hours' journey. The London and Birmingham Railway was commenced in 1825, and completed in 1825, at an expense of 5,500,000*l.*; and by means of the Grand Junction Railway, Birmingham has communication with Warrington, Stafford, Manchester and Liverpool. By its charter of incorporation, dated 1825, Birmingham is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor and recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 common councilmen. Corp. rev. 29,025*l.* It has a bor. court of quarter-sessions, and a town court of requests. Assessed taxes 28,000*l.*; poor-rates, 37,563*l.* Since the Reform Act it has sent two members to House of Commons. Registered electors 7,635. This town is supposed to have been a place where arms were manufactured in the time of the ancient Britons; its high commercial importance dates, however, only from the 17th century.

BLACK or EUXINE SEA, Pontus Euxinus, a great inland sea between Europe and Asia, within the parallels of lat. 40° 45' and 46° 45' N., extending from lon. 27° 30' to 41° 50' E.; extreme length 700 m., greatest breadth 980 m. Area 172,000 sq. m. It is surrounded by the countries of Russia, Armenia, and Asiatic and European Turkey, and communicates by the strait of Yenikale with the Sea of Azov on the N.E., and by the Bosphorus, with the Sea of Marmara in the S.W. The shores of the Euxine are bold and high on the N.E., E., and S.W., but flat on the N. and N.W.; its depth varies from 4 to 48 fathoms near its shores, but in the middle no soundings have been obtained at 150 fathoms. The water contains 1-7th less salt than the ocean, and is so fresh that it easily freezes. It has numerous small ports; but the only gulf of importance is that of Kerkit, between the Crimea and the continent of Russia. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube—the largest of these, Serpent island, is furnished with a lighthouse. The chief affluents of the Euxine are the Danube, Dniester, Bug, Dnieper, the Don (by the Sea of Azov and the Strait of Yenikale), and the Kuban in Europe; and the Kisil-Irmak and Sakara in Asia. The streams of these rivers produce strong currents, particularly in the beginning of summer. The Black Sea has no perceptible tide; it is liable to frequent storms, such as are generally met with in great lakes and enclosed seas; but its navigation is so far from being very dangerous, as formerly represented, that probably no sea of equal extent is more safe. It has neither islands, rocks, nor reefs in the tracks of navigation, and has everywhere excellent anchorage. Until interrupted in 1854, it was traversed regularly by steam-packets between Constantinople and the mouths of the Danube, and between the principal ports of Russia. On 14th November 1854, a hurricane swept over this sea, causing the destruction of several English and French transports, laden with stores for the Anglo-French army in the Crimea.

Prag (Prague). Area estimated at 90,000 sq. m. Pop. (1854) 4,800,818. The territory forms an enclosed plateau, nearly surrounded by elevated chains of mountains, the chief of which are the Riesengebirge (Giant mountains) on the N., the Sudetengebirge N.E., the Böhmerwald S.W., and Erzgebirge (Ore mtns.) in the N.W. The interior is traversed by the contreforts of these chains. Its principal valleys are those of the Elbe and Moldau. Forming the upper basin of the Elbe, to which nearly all its streams are tributary, the country is richly watered. The Elbe rises in the Riesengebirge, and receives on the right the Isar, and on the left the Aupe, Mattau, Elbitz, Moldau, Eger, and Billa. The Moldau, the largest river in the kingdom, receives on the right the Cezawa and the Luschnitz, on the left the Watawa and the Beraun. The climate is in general healthy, mild in the valleys, but cold in the mountainous regions; the higher mountains being covered with snow during great part of the year. Soil in general fertile, especially in the N. and N.E., in the valleys of the Eger and Elbe. The productive part of the land farms nearly 13-16ths of the superficies. Bohemia is both an agricultural and a manufacturing country, but especially rich in the produce of its agriculture. The principal products are rye, oats, potatoes, fruit, flax, hops, and beet-root for the manuf. of sugar. Vines are grown only in part of the valley of the Elbe. The forests yield a large amount of timber. Chief mining districts are in the Erzgebirge and the contreforts of the Fichtelgebirge. The gold mines are now abandoned, and the silver mines have lost much of their importance. Among the other metals and minerals are emerald, blimoth, chrome, stic, sulphur, alum, marble, coal, iron, copper and tin. Bohemia possesses a great number of mineral springs of all kinds. Manufs. thread, linens, cotton, iron, woollens, glass, and paper. The commerce of the country consists in the exportation of the products of the soil and manufs., the importation of colonial goods, and the transit of merchandise from North Germany to Austria, Switzerland, and Italy. The Elbe and the Moldau are navigated by steam packets, and the latter communicates with the Danube by a horse railway from Budweis to Linz. Prague is connected by railways with Olmütz on the E., Lissa on the W., and Leitmeritz and Dresden on the N. Bohemia, with the title of kingdom, forms a provincial government of the Austrian empire, having certain political privileges. The Emperor of Austria bears the title of King of Bohemia, and is crowned at Prague. It came into the possession of the house of Austria in 1526. It consists of 1 district, that of Prag, and 16 circles; Beraun, Bidschow, Budweis, Benlsau, Chröden, Czealan, Elbogen, Kaarain, Klattau, Königgrätz, Leitmeritz, Pilsen, Prachin, Rakonitz, Saas, and Tabor. Roman Catholicism is the religion of the state, but other sects are tolerated. Bohemia possesses many establishments for public instruction. The university of Prag is one of the most anc. in Germany; it had, in 1842, 71 professors and teachers, and 2,741 students. The kingdom has 3 episcopal schools, 32 gymnasia, having (in 1846) 5,888 pupils. The number of private schools was (in 1846) 3,490, attended by 616,881 pupils, while the number of children able to attend school was 644,922. Has many learned societies, with which are connected public libraries, botanic gardens, and scientific collections. The chief fortifications are at Prag, Josephstadt, Königgrätz, and Theresienstadt.

The centre of the country is covered with ramifications of the Andes, which here divide into two cordilleras, enclosing the Lake of Titicaca. The W. Cordillera forms the boundary on the side of Peru, between lat. 18° and 22° S., and the volcanoes of Atacama and Tacora. The region between the Pacific and the Andes is nearly barren, and is called the desert of Atacama. The valley of Titicaca is rather fertile, especially in the vicinity of the lake. The long valleys S. of the Sierra de la Cruz, are the most populous and best cultivated parts of Bolivia, especially the valley of Cochabamba. The Yunga valleys N. of Sierra de la Cruz are also fertile. The plains of Moxos and Chuquitos are covered with dense forests. The streams which descend from the W. valley of the Andes do not reach the Pacific, except the Loa, which flows 180 m., but with a scanty supply of water. Numerous rivers descend from the E. declivity of the Andes. These belong to the basins of either the Amazon or La Plata; among the former class, the Beni, Mamora, Rio Grande or Guapay, tributaries of the Madeira, are the principal; and, among the latter, the Pilcomayo and Paraguay. The Desaguadero (has its entire course 200 m. in Bolivia) flows out of Lake Titicaca, the largest lake in South America. Besides Lake Titicaca, the S.E. half of which is in this republic, there are many others in the wide plains in the E., a region said to be little above the sea level. In the middle region the rainy season lasts from November to February; but on the coast rain seldom falls. Amongst the vegetable productions are cacao, cotton, indigo, rice, barley, oats, potatoes, maize, sugar cane, cinchona (Peruvian bark), and many other valuable drugs, the finest fruits, and timber fit for every purpose. Gold is found in all the rivers in the E. Cordillera of the Andes; and the productiveness of the silver mines of Potosí were for a long time very great, though now on the decline. Lead, tin, salt, sulphur, nitre, are also met with. Copper mines abundant, but are too far inland to be wrought to advantage. Among the wild animals are the tapir, jaguar, leopard, monkey, amphibious reptiles, birds, and fishes in great numbers. The climate of the plains is too hot for sheep; but herds of cattle graze on the banks of the rivers, and the llama, guanaco, and vicuña live in the mountains. More than 3-4ths of the population are Indians, the rest mestizos, Spaniards, and a few Africans. The natives of the valley of Titicaca follow agriculture and the rearing of cattle. The plains are inhabited by numerous Indian tribes, who manuf. fine cloths, fans, parasols; the other manufs. are of cotton goods, and glass wares at Cochabamba, cloths of llama and alpaca hair at La Paz, hats of vicuña wool at Atacama, vessels of silver wire in the making statistics. The Jesuits, who founded missions in the provs. of the Moxos and Chiquitos, have been partly successful in uniting all the tribes under a uniform language (Chiquito), and code of laws. The foreign commerce of Bolivia is small, owing to its being almost shut out by the Andes from contact with the sea. Foreign goods mostly come from Peru by way of Arica and Tacna, and are subject to a high transit duty. Imports are mostly confined to iron, hardware, silk, and a few other articles; and the exports to the precious metals, wool, woollen goods, hats, pewter, cacao leaf, cinchona bark, skins, soap, and tobacco. The executive government is vested in a president; the legislative functions are exercised by a senate, tribunes, and censors. The country is divided into 8 bishoprics; but there is no church exclusively supported by the state. Public revenue about 1,700,000 dollars a year. Standing army about 2,000 men. There is said to be no public debt. Bolivia, under the name of Upper Peru, was formerly a part of the Spanish vicereignty of Buenos Ayres; but it acquired its independence in 1824, and its name was assumed in honour of Bolívar, who, in 1826, drew up its earliest constitution. Chiquitaca is the cap. and seat of general government. Cobija is the only seaport.

BOMBAY PRINCIPALITY, the most westerly of the three presid. of British India, betw. lat. 16° 18' & 23° 54' N., lon. 71° 32' & 76° 32' E., having N.W. and N. the Guiderwar's dom., E. the territories of Indore and the Nizam, S. Coa. Mysore, and the Madras presid., and W. the Indian Ocean. Area 67,945 sq. m. Pop. (1852) 11,199,067, or, including Sind and the states of the native princes subject to the British Government. Area 176,985 sq. m. Pop. 15,578,692. The W. Ghats separate the W. or maritime from the E. districts, which latter form a part of the great tableland of the Deccan. In the N. the mountains belong to the Satpura and other ranges connected with the Vindhyan chain. Principal rivers, the Nerbudda, Taptes, Mhye, and Sabermutty, falling into the Gulf of Cambay; above the ghats, the rivers are tributary to the Godavary and Kistnah. Climate for the most part less hot and more healthy than in the other presid., a great part of the country being under the influence of the sea-breezes. The roads in the interior are so bad, and navigable rivers so few, as seriously to impede the resources of the presidency; and of the sheep sent from Candeleh and the Deccan to Bombay, not one-third reach the city alive. Rice and cotton are the principal articles of culture. Sugar and indigo are raised in Candeleh. Cardamoms, pepper, and teak, are almost exclusively the growth of this region. The N. dists. are famous for their great variety of fruits; cocoa palms cover a large extent of sandy land in the Concan. Wool has lately been exported in considerable quantities from Bombay; and great exertions have been made to introduce the culture of silk. The cattle of Guzerat are a large and fine breed; W. of the ghats the ox and buffalo are almost the only domestic animals. The whole presid. is assessed under the native village-system of India, except the dists. of Surat and Kaira, where the ryotwary system is in force. Principal manufs. are of embroidered silks, and woollen and cotton cloths. [For an account of the foreign trade, see BOMBAY CITY.] Government vested in a governor and three members of council, of whom one is commander-in-chief; the whole administration being subordinate to the Gov.-General of India in Council. In the cap. of each collectorate is the seat of a British collector, and a judge, subordinate to the central court of Bombay. Revenue for the year 1851, 4,430,770. The army comprises about 65,000 men and officers. The whole of the Indian marine is attached to this presidency, which numbers 48 vessels. In the S. there are many native, Roman Catholic, and Nestorian Christians. The Parsees are now almost confined to this part of Asia. There are in the presidency an English episcopal bishopric with 24 clergy, a Scottish church and Roman Catholic establishment, which receive government aid. Elphinstone college was founded in 1837, and there are 120 schools for the native Hindoos, in which from 800 to 800 boys receive education, besides nearly 2,000 native village schools. Bombay was the earliest possession of the British in the east. It was ceded by the Moguls to the Portuguese in 1500, and it came into the possession of the English in 1662, as a part of the dowry of the Infanta of Portugal, on her marriage with Charles II.; but by far the greater part of the territory was acquired between 1666 and 1818.

BOMBAY, a city, seaport, and cap. of the above presidency, is situated on a narrow neck of land at the S.E. extremity of the island of Bombay, on an excellent land-locked harbour. Lat.

19° 14' N., lon. 72° 47' E.

B. Pop. in 1718, 16,000; in 1818, 161,850; and in 1843, 348,118. It consists of the fort or old town, 1 m. in length by $\frac{1}{2}$ m. in breadth, and in which the European inhabitants, and most of the French merchants reside; and the new town, about 1 m. northward, inhabited by the Hindoos and Mohammedan native pop. Has four banks, and insurance of lives, shipping, and fire. The houses within the walls are built of wood, and covered with tiles. Principal edifices in the fort are the court-house, secretariate, and other government offices, custom-house, town-hall, castle, mint, cathedral of St Thomas, St Andrew's Scotch churches, European hospital. Sir J. Jejeebhoy's hospital, the Byculla church and club, the house of correction, theatre, and the Hindoo temple of Mamba Devi. On the S.W. the fort is connected by Colaba causeway, with the isl. of Colaba, on which are the lighthouse, observatory, lunatic asylum, and a stone pier. The government-house is at Parcell, 8 m. N. of the fort. The harbour of Bombay affords good anchorage for ships of the largest burden; on it are also excellent building and other docks. Surface mountainous, with a slope S.; and this region differs from most others, in its lower hill ranges having but a scanty vegetation, while its finest forests are from 8,000 to 10,000 feet above the sea. Products are oak, pine, rattan, fruits, and vegetables. Wheat, barley, rice, maize, and buckwheat are raised in terraces along the hill sides; but supplies of grain, as also of sugar and tobacco, come from Bengal, in return for native cloths, rock-salt, rhubarb, jabring spice, Tibet goods, mules, and ponies. Iron is the only mineral raised, though Bootan is reported to be rich in copper and other metals. Manufactures are of woven goods, paper, a species of satin from bark, tobacco-pouches, gunpowder, arms, and hardwares. Principal trade is with Bengal; from Tibet, however, some silks and tea are imported. Towns are few; the principal are Thakaudon and Punakha. Dharma Rajah, or nominal sovereign and ecclesiastical chief, is supposed to be divine, leaves state affairs to the Deb-Rajah and council of state, which consists of eight members (one of whom he appoints), without whose authority the Deb-Rajah can do nothing important. The state religion is Buddhism, and Bootan swarms with priests, the monastic endowments absorbing a large part of the national property. The custom of polyandry is prevalent; but polygamy also prevails, and to these causes the comparative thinness of the population has been attributed.

BORNEO (native name Pulo-Kalamantan), an island of Malaysia, near the centre of the Eastern Archipelago, in the Pacific Ocean, situated between lat. 7° 4' N., and 4° 10' S., lon. 108° 50' and 115° 20' E., divided by the equator into two nearly equal portions, and bounded N. and W. by the China Sea, S. by the Sea of Java, and E. by the Sea of Celebes and the Strait of Macassar. Is of a compact form, and has few indentations of the sea, but many bays and creeks. Length 800 m., breadth 700 m. Estimated area 306,000 sq. m. The pop. has been variously estimated; it appears to be but thinly inhabited, 2,450,000 being the probable number. The shores are low and often marshy, being surrounded by numerous islets and rocks. Little is known of the interior except in the dist. of Banjermassin, on the S.E., and a portion of Borneo Proper on the N. Two nearly parallel ranges of mountains run through the island from S.W. to N.E., between which are extensive and well-watered plains. The W. most of these chains rises in the territory of Sarawak, with an elevation of about 3,250 feet, and gradually increases in elevation till it terminates near the N. coast in Mount Kintu Batu, 13,608 feet in elevation. The second range, which crosses the equator, in lon. 115° E., appears to be much lower than the former: a cross range leaves the first chain about lat. 2° N., and running S.E. extends through Banjermassin. The chief rivers are, on the N. and W. coast, the Borneo or Brunai, on which is situated the cap. of the isl., and which opens into a bay of same name, in lat. 5° N. The Seribee which falls into the China Sea, in lat. 2° 10' N. The Batang-Iopar, a magnificent river, the mouth of which, 4 m. wide, is in lat. 1° 30' N.; on its l. b., 35 m. from its mouth, is the town of Pakuwa, which was strongly fortified and held by a band of pirates, but was destroyed by the expedition under Sir James Brooke in 1846. The

Morotaba or Sarawak, which flows N.E. and N. nearly through the centre of the territory of same name. The Pontianak, formed by the junction of numerous streams, rises about lon. 117° 30', and reaches the sea in lon. 109° 15' on the equator. The Majak opens into a wide estuary in lat. 0° 30' S. On the S. are the Pemban, Sampet, and Mendawa, in districts of same names, between lon. 112° and 118° 30' E. The Kabajan and Muring, or rivers of the Great and Little Dyaks, and the Banjar or Barito, which rises in the central mountains, lat. 0° 30' N., flows first E. and then S., with a very winding course, and reaches the Java Sea by a wide estuary, in lat. 3° 30' S., lon. 114° 35' E., about 12 m. S. the town of Banjermassin, of which territory it forms the W. boundary. On the E. coast the Koetel forms a wide delta between lat. 0° 20' and 1° S., and the Berou reaches the sea by several branches, about lat. 2° N. Most of these rivers are navigable. The only known lake of importance is that of Kintu Batu, S.E. of the mountain of same name, the centre of which is in lat. 0° 40' N., lon. 117° E.; it is 35 m. long, and 30 m. broad. The climate is tropical in the interior, but on the N. coast it is European. Minerals comprise gold, silver, diamonds, antimony ore, tin, iron, and coal. The chief diamond mines are those of Landak, 60 m. N.E. Pontianak, on river of that name. The gold of Sambas yields 500,000, annually. Excellent coal is worked in several places, especially in Borneo-Propor and Banjermassin. The soil is very fertile. The forests furnish timber, and in common with many other islands of the archipelago, the gutta-percha or gutta-taban tree. Among the vegetable productions are maize, rice, yams, batatas, coconut, betel, tobacco, cotton, sugar-cane, pepper, and other spices and tropical fruits. The animals comprise the elephant, rhinoceros, leopard, ox, wild hog, deer, horse, and monkey, among these the orang-outang is conspicuous. The Dyaks are the aborigines of Borneo; they are divided into numerous tribes, and they still retain possession of the interior of the island, but they are called Dyaks only in the W. Dutch residences and the district of Sarawak; in other parts they are called Bajak, Marat, and Kajan. Each petty tribe is named after the river on which it is settled. Those on the W. side of the island live in sheds or houses large enough to contain the whole community. The houses are built on piles of wood from 5 to 20 feet from the ground, the floors being of split bamboo, and the roof of the leaf of the Niebong. The apartments of the married are separated from the common room by thin partitions of split cane. In the centre of the building is the apartment of the chief and the "head room," where are kept the heads which every man must procure before he is allowed to marry. They have no religious ceremonies nor priests. Their chiefs have some influence, but are not armed with full power. When the fertility of their rice grounds is exhausted, they remove their settlement elsewhere. In the prov. of Banjermassin, a savage tribe live in trees, and hold no intercourse with other people. The Malays retain their distinctive character as a separate nation, having great partiality for the gun, and following piracy as an occupation. They are leagued together by societies called Kong-ase, and confirm their oath by drinking blood, to protect themselves against the other tribes. They are skilful in working iron. The mining of the country is in the hands of Chinese.

Borneo is divided into many separate states, governed by native chiefs; the best known of these are Brunai or Borneo Proper, which extends over the level space on the N. coast, the sultan of which is now placed under the superintendence of Sir James Brooke. Sambas, Pontianak, Sim-pang, and Matan, on the W. coast, Banjarmassin on the S., and the territory of the sultan of So-loo on the E. Off the N. coast of the island, and about 30 m. N.E. Brunai, is the island of Labuan, now belonging to Britain [LABUAN], and on the N. coast, near the N.W. part of the island, is the territory of Sarawak, extending between lat. 1° and 2° N., lon. 109° 40' and 110° 45' E., bounded W. and S. by the mountains of Krimbang, and watered by the river Sarawak and tributaries. This territory enjoys an excellent climate, is rich in mineral coal, being better than Newcastle coal, and agricultural products, and is well situated for trade. The capital is Sarawak (formerly called Kuchin). Pop. (1848) estim. at 12,000, including 150 Chinese. Under the government of Sir James Brooke, the inhabitants of this part of Borneo have commenced a hopeful career of civilization; an English church mission has been established, and a native school built at the town of Sarawak, which, previous to his visit, comprised only a few mud houses, and about 1,500 inhabitants.

The authority of the Dutch possessions are divided politically into the residency of the W coast, cap. Pontianak, and the residency of the S. and E. coasts, cap. Banjarmassin. Pop. of Dutch possessions in 1856, 844,000. By a decree of the gov.-gen. of the Netherlands East Indies, dated 1846, these possessions are henceforth to form a special government. [BANJARMASSIN-PONTIANAK.] Borneo was discovered by the Portuguese in 1521. The English and Portuguese several times attempted to found establishments on its coasts without success. The Dutch had extensive commercial relations with the W. coast, where they had factories at Soetadana and Pontianak, at the commencement of the 17th century; part of the W. coast was ceded to them by the king of Bantam in 1780, and they founded the establishment of Pontianak in 1823. The sovereignty of the S. coast was ceded to the Dutch by the sultan of Banjarmassin in 1787; but the most important event in the recent history of Borneo, is the enterprise of Sir James Brooke, who first visited the island in 1839, and has since been actively engaged in the suppression of piracy, the administration of justice, and the encouragement of commerce and manufactures.

Lat. of state-house 42° 21' 28" N., lon. 71° 4' 9" W. Pop. in 1800, 24,987; in 1840, 98,988; in 1850, 138,788, exclusive of the suburbs of Charleston, Dorchester, etc., with which it communicates by several bridges, with its suburbs. The city proper is mostly built on a peninsula, 8 m. in length by 1 in breadth, and connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. Its streets, lined with houses of deep red brick, are irregularly laid out on an uneven surface. The quays are extensive; and the common, consisting of nearly 80 acres, forms a beautiful promenade. Chief edifices, the state-house, city-hall, Faneuil-hall, in which public meetings are held, Faneuil-hall market, 596 feet in length, the Massachusetts hospital, custom house, co. gaol, houses of industry and correction, 2 theatres, an atheneum, with a picture gallery and a library, an Odeon, and about 100 churches of different sects. Here are the medical branch of Harvard university, numerous superior schools, literary, scientific, and charitable institutions, banks and insurance companies. There are 13 daily newspapers, besides other publications, issued in Boston. The harbour is commodious, vessels of the largest class approaching the quays; and the bay (which has at its entrance a revolving light 65 feet in height) is studded with numerous elevated islets, which protect the port from the winds, and furnish convenient sites for fortresses. The city is connected with Worcester, Providence, Lowell, Maine, and other parts of the interior by railways, canals, and navigable rivers, and several British steam-ships form a packet line between Boston and Liverpool, calling at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Boston is not the only port of the manufacturing region of the United States, but the great emporium of New England. Imports consist of flour, grain, cotton, staves, coal, tobacco, rice, from most of the states of the Union, and of most kinds of European manufs., wines, brandies, East and West Indian produce, from abroad. The chief exports are beef, pork, lard, salted fish, ice, and manufactured goods, as woollens, cottons, paper, boots and shoes, cordage, hardware, furniture, in the production of which Massachusetts excels all the other states. Value of foreign imports into Massachusetts, in 1850, 30,374,634 dollars. Exports 10,681,763 dollars; but the exports to the Southern U. S. greatly exceed the imports thence, and leave the general balance of trade in favour of Boston. New York alone is supposed to be at all times its debtor to the amount of 5,000,000 dollars. In 1849 the imports comprised 269,813 bales of cotton, 269,632 tons anthracite, 987,988 barrels of flour, 3,002,593 bushels of corn, 621,513 bushels of oats, rye, and shorts, 38,199 barrels tar-pentine, 668,530 pigs of leather, 156,566 barrels of pork, 300,530 sides of lead, etc. This city enjoys the largest share of the United States trade with India and China. Shipping of port (1850) 320,687 tons. Customs rev. (1843) 3,242,189 dollars. Boston, in 1822, adopted a city municipality, and is governed by a mayor, aldermen, and common council chosen annually. The town was founded in 1630, and named after the English town, whence many of its inhabitants had emigrated. The American revolution commenced in Boston, which town took the lead in opposing the taxation of the colonies. In 1775 the British army, 10,000 strong, had possession of the town, but were compelled to withdraw in March 1776. Its inhabitants have since been pre-eminently distinguished amongst their co-citizens of the United States for their success in the cultivation of science and literature, as well as their untiring application to commercial pursuits. Bourbon or Ile de la Réunion, an island of the Mascarene group, Indian Ocean, forming a French colony, cap. St Denis, in lat. 20° 61' 43" S., lon. 55° 38' 16" E. Length 38 m.; breadth 28 m. Pop., exclusive of its dependencies, Nosse-Bé and Mayotte, and the small island of St Marie, near Madagascar (1855) 172,364, including 34,461 Indians, 460 Chinese, 6,366 Negroes, a garrison of 1,145 men, and 704 officials. The island is of volcanic origin, and of an elliptical form. It is traversed from N. to S. by a chain of mountains which divides it into two portions, differing in formation, climate, and productions; these are on the E. partie du vent (windward), and W. partie sous le vent (leeward) side. The chief summits are the Piton de Neiges, an extinct volcano 10,100 feet, Grand Bernard, 9,500 feet, Cimandé, 7,300 feet, and Piton de la Fournaise, an active volcano, 7,318 feet above the level of the sea. There are no extensive plains, but the mountains which cover the entire surface are separated by narrow valleys; it is watered by numerous streams, all of which are rapid and nons navigable. The climate has recently undergone a great change, being formerly very salubrious. The bloody flux and a typhoid fever attacks every European after a residence of four or five years on the island. Mean temp. at St Denis 77° Fahr. Annual average of rain 128 inches. Yearly mean of wind 306 days E., 55 days W. Winter, 1st May to 1st October; rainy season, 1st Nov. to 30th April. The prevailing winds drive the rain clouds to the E. side of the island, and often originate terrific hurricanes; on such occasions the waves, usually 3 to 4 feet, rise to 50 or 60 feet, the sky assumes a copper colour, the temperature rises to its maximum intensity, the barometer sinks to its lowest point, rain falls in torrents, and the wind blows with resistless force,—men, animals, trees, and houses are overturned. Has no port, and its anchorage is insecure. In 1842-4, 11 large vessels were wrecked near its shores. The soil is fertile in the vicinity of the coast. The products are sugar, coffee, cloves, maize, rice, and tobacco. The corn raised is insufficient for consumption, is only used by Europeans, and manioc is the chief food of the slaves. Principal exports, sugar, coffee, cloves, dye-woods, and saltpetre; imports wheat, oil, wine, cattle, timber, salt, glass, and manufactured goods. Bourbon was discovered in 1545 by the Portuguese, who called it Mascarenhas, from the name of their chief. Was occupied by the English in 1810, and restored to France in 1814. The island is divided into the arrondis. St Denis, comprising the natural division called the "partie du vent," and the arrond. St Paul, comprising the "partie sous le vent."

BRAZIL, an empire of South America, occupying a large proportion of the eastern and central part of that country, extending between lat. 4° $30'$ N. and 33° S., lon. 35° and 70° W. Length from N. to S. 2,600 m.; breadth 2,540 m. Its internal boundaries come in contact with all the different states and territories of South America, with the exception of Chile and Patagonia, while the Atlantic Ocean washes its shores from its N.E. to its S. limits. Pop. (1856) 7,677,800. The empire is divided into 20 provinces. The surface of Brazil is about equally divided into uplands and lowlands or valleys. Two parallel mountain ranges traverse the country from N. to S., forming elevated ridges of table-land. The greatest height of the central range being from 8,000 to 7,000 feet. Several minor ranges intersect the country, enclosing tracts, some of which are elevated, and others low-lying plains. The N. part of Brazil consists of the greater part of the plain through which flows the river Amazon, and its tributaries, and varying in width from 350 to 800 m. The rivers, lakes, and water courses are so numerous as completely to intersect this plain, the soil of which is deep and soft, and covered for the most part with dense forests. S.E. of this is another plain. The principal rivers in this direction are the Tocantins, Araguay, Parahiba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Doce, Parahibado-Sul, and Rio Grande-do-Sul, all of large size, but of difficult navigation, in consequence of rapids. The table-land on the W. is separated from the Andes of Bolivia by a large plain, traversed by those rivers, which join to form the Madeira. On the banks of the Iritana, and W. ward to the N. branch of the Serra Parecis, extends a sandy and barren desert, called Campos dos Parecis. From seven lakes (Sete Lagoas) on this table land rises the river Paragway, which flows S. through a swampy country, and then through the plain of Paragway to join the Paraná. The latter receives the Rio Grande, the Parahiba, Sapucahy, Pardo, and many others which flow in a S.E. direction into the Atlantic. The Uruguay flows S. through another table-land to the plain of the Misiones. The principal lakes are Patos, an enlargement of the Rio Grande and Lake Mirim. Others of less size are in the W. provinces. The climate of the Amazon Valley is of a tropical nature; only the dry and rainy seasons are not distinctly marked. The nights are cloudless; but in the morning the clouds accumulate and continue till the afternoon, when thunder and lightning, with torrents of rain, prevail for two hours, and all again is clear. The climate of Central and West Brazil is more varied, the heat in the dry season being excessive, while frosty nights are of frequent occurrence in winter; rain is some situations is of rare occurrence. The climate in the valley of the S.E. coast is, notwithstanding its low latitude, as genial as that of Italy, being clear and serene, and refreshed by the sea-breezes from the E. At Rio Janeiro the annual mean of Fahr. is 75° . The shores of the E. coast are generally low-lying, the grounds rising gradually behind into the mountain region, which runs parallel to the coast. The harbours of Rio de Janeiro and Bahia are good. The population of Brazil consists of Europeans, whites born in the country, who call themselves Brazilians; Mulattoes; Mamelucos, or offspring of whites and native Indians; Negroes; Mestizos or Zambos, mixed castes between Negroes and Indians; and the Aborigines or American Indians. The slave population consists of Negroes and mixed breeds. Of the Aborigines, a portion are in a civilized condition, who are styled Caboccos; the others are in a savage and un reclaimed state.

There is little political division of castes; and intermarriages among the different races are common. Aboriginal slavery has been legally abolished; and the laws regarding slaves are not stringent. Thirty-five holidays in the year, besides Saturdays, are allowed to the slave; and he can demand his liberty on paying a sum equal to his value. The emperor sanctioned the law for the suppression of the slave trade, on 6th June 1854.

There are in Brazil 88 titles of nobility; but these are not hereditary. Little has been done for education throughout the empire; schools, and even school-books are deficient. The ecclesiastical establishment is also at a low ebb, and many districts are almost wholly deficient of ministers of religion. Roman Catholicism is the prevailing and recognised creed. The exercise of other religions is only tolerated within the domestic circle. The monastic system is on the decline. The country along the coast and the banks of some of the rivers, besides some extensive tracts in Minas Geraes have been brought under cultivation, but it is calculated that not one acre out of 150, so that the greater portion of the surface remains in a state of nature. The forests furnish every variety of timber, more than 100 species of palms, logwood, mahogany, Brazil, and numerous other dye-woods, with sassafras, sarsaparilla, ipeacuanha, and a vast variety of other drugs. Cocoa, caoutchouc, and manioc, are indigenous products; maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, wheat, and tobacco, have been introduced by European culture. The culture of the tea plant has been unsuccessfully attempted; the peru maiz, or Paragway tea, is, however, an abundant product of the W. provs. The horse, ox, and sheep, derived from European stocks, have been naturalized in the country; and herds of cattle are reared on the more open parts. Wild animals comprise the jaguar, hyena, tiger-cat, tapir, wild-hog, and a great variety of birds of the richest plumage. The diamond mines of Minas Geraes are very productive. The estimated value of diamonds produced here, from 1740 to 1829, was 8,475,637*l*. Other gems, and quantities of gold, besides silver, copper, iron, and platinum, are among the mineral products of the same prov.; these mines are now wrought by the Anglo-Brazilian mining company, organized under the auspices of Don Pedro, in 1825. Manufactures, cotton weaving, and tanning; nearly all branches of industry being performed by slaves. From its central position in reference to the chief commercial countries of the globe, and its extensive line of coast, Brazil is favourably situated for trade, which, though extensive, is not yet nearly commensurate with the resources of the empire. Exports from the N. provs. are coffee, cotton, cacao, sugar, and tobacco; from the S., hides, tallow, and other animal products; and from the capital and middle provs., these, with drugs, diamonds, gold-dust, dyes, rice, manioc, tapioca, spirits, and rosewood. Total value of imports (1845) 6,678,602*l*. Total value of exports in do. 5,489,679*l*.

The government is an hereditary limited monarchy; the legislative power is vested in a senate of 54 members and a chamber of deputies, the former elected for life, and the latter for four years, elected by free citizens having property to 200 milrees annually. Each member of the legislative receives a salary. Parliaments are quinquennial, each sitting lasting 4 months. The justices of the peace are elected by the people in each district. Trial by jury exists in both civil and criminal courts. In Rio and Bahia are superior courts with 8 judges each; and the former city is also the seat of a supreme judicial tribunal, with 12 judges appointed by the crown. The executive government is in the 6 departments of the empire, justice, foreign affairs, navy, war, and finances. Total expenditure, in 1849-50, amounted to 2,680,217*l*, being less than the income. In 1848, the public debt was 15,918,993*l*. The military force for 1850-51 was 25,000 men of the line, 60,000 national guards, and a well-equipped police force. In 1850, the navy comprised 40 vessels of all sizes, manned by 3,500 men. Brazil was first discovered in 1500; and began to be colonized by the Portuguese in 1531. In 1808, King John vi. of Portugal took up his residence in Brazil; and, in 1815, constituted it a kingdom. In 1822 it declared itself an independent state; and it obtained a constitution in 1825. Rio de Janeiro is the cap. of the empire and the seat of government.

BRITAIN or GRREAT BRITAIN, including England and Scotland, is the largest island of Europe, and the principal of the group of the British Isles, bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean, on the S. separated from France by the English Channel; bounded on the W. by the Irish Sea, and on the N.W. by the Atlantic Ocean. Its extreme length extends from lat. 50° to 58° 40' N., or about 567 m.; its greatest breadth from lon. 5° 45' W. to 1° 45' E., or about 380 m. In general form it is wedge-shaped, being broadest at its S. extremity, and narrowest at its northern. Its eastern coast forms a waving continuous and rarely broken line, but the western coast is extremely irregular, and deeply indented with many bays and arms of the sea, interspersed with no-mountainous islands. The S.E. part of Britain is a level alluvial surface; the centre undulating and hilly; the W. and N.W. mountainous and irregular. In the N. and W., primary strata and granite rocks prevail, in the middle districts, coal, lime, salt, and ironstone are abundant, and these are succeeded in England, in its E. and S.E. valleys, by oolite, chalk and the newer geological formations. A mountain range, more or less elevated, extends from S. to N. of the island, running through Cornwall, Devonshire, Somersetshire, and thence through Wales, varying in elevation from 1,500 to 3,500 feet. Another branch extends from the Cotswold Hills, Gloucestershire, and runs through Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Northumberland, with elevation from 2,000 to 3,000 feet; succeeding these are the Cheviots, the Lammemoors, and the great Grampian range which intersect Scotland, and whose extreme altitude is measured by Ben Nevis on the W., and Ben Macdui on the N.E., both attaining an elevation of upwards of 4,800 feet. The most considerable rivers are the Severn, Mersey, Dee, Merse, Clyde, on the W. coast; and the Thames, Trent, Humber, Tyne, Forth, Tay, and Spey, on the E. coast. The principal lakes are those of Cumberland and Westmoreland in England, and Lochs Lomond, Tay, and Marae, in Scotland. The principal bays and estuaries are the Bristol Channel, Cardigan Bay, Lancaster Bay, the Solway Firth, Firth of Clyde on the W., and the Thames mouth, the Wash, the Humber, the Firths of Forth, Tay, Murray, and Cromarty on the E., while on the S. there are Falmouth, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and other important bays and harbours.

The British Islands include Ireland, the Isle of Wight, Anglesea, Man, the Scilly isles, Bute, Arran, the Hebrides, Orkney, and Shetland islands. Being surrounded by the ocean, and having a branch of the Gulf Stream flowing along the W. coast, the mean annual temperature of the British Isles is equal to that of countries in much lower latitudes on the continent of Europe, while the winter temperature is much higher in proportion. Mean temperature of W. coast, winter 49° 3'; summer 56° Fahr. E. coast, winter 38° 2'; summer 59° Fahr. Annual mean temperature 49° Fahr. Mean temperature of the hottest month (July) 80° to 85° Fahr. Prevailing winds for some months of the year S.W., W., and N.W. From March to May, E.N.E. and N. winds prevail. Annual rain-fall on E. coast, 27 inches, and rainy days, 165; W. coast, 50 inches, and rainy days, 208. Though variable, the climate of Britain is found, from tables of longevity, to be one of the most salubrious in the world, while the very general cultivation and drainage of the soil have removed those maladies that originate in marsh effluvia. Within the last century the average longevity of the pop. has been greatly increased. In 1800 the average mortality was 1 in 32, in 1847 1 in 45. The area of Britain is 88,050 sq. m., or excluding water 55,943,660 ac. In 1831 the pop. of the United Kingdom was 21,202,966; in 1851, 24,410,429; in 1841, 27,019,558; in 1851, 27,724,849. The indigenous vegetation of Britain partakes of the character of that of the contiguous parts of Europe. All the grains and grasses and the common European fruits, grow in almost all districts and situations not too elevated, and both agriculture and horticulture have been brought to a great degree of perfection. The breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and other useful animals are also of the best description. Of wild animals the fox, badger, wild cat, stoat, martin, otter, squirrel, hedgehog, dormouse, mole, mouse, hare, and rabbit, are the principal. The stag and fallow deer are still abundant in several localities. The bittern, eagle, and other birds of prey are becoming more rare. The eastern half of the island is generally an agricultural, while the western is a grazing country. The total number of acres of land under cultivation and pasture in the United Kingdom has been roughly estimated at 48,779,000; of this 22,772,000 ac. are supposed to be annually under crop, gardens, etc.; the amount of corn, after deducting seed, is estimated at 84,252,000 qrs. In 1852, the annual value of real property assessed to the property-tax in Great Britain, amounted to 258,456,651l.; and the number of houses charged with the house-duty was 475,617 houses, and the amount assessed, 708,970l. In 1851, the total amount of expenditure upon the various colonies was 2,914,354l., of which 2,432,910l. was for military; 486,460l. for civil; and 57,504l. for naval services. The penal establishments form a large part of the charges for civil services. Amount of revenue of the United Kingdom for 1852, 52,210,071l.; expenditure, 50,792,311l. 18s. 9d.; and the total amount of public debt was 782,869,382l. Real value of exports of manufs. and produce amounted to 78,049,867l. Official value of exports, 196,216,610l. Official value of imports, 109,345,409l. Number of vessels arrived, 29,884; burden, 6,730,169 tons. Cleared, 31,746; burden, 6,872,581 tons. The total mercantile fleet, exclusive of fishing boats, was 17,819; burden, 3,890,884 tons; and their crews numbered a total of 177,963 men and boys; and there were engaged in fisheries 10,914 boats, of 76,823 tons, with 41,187 men and boys. The value of boats, lines, and nets being 535,779l. The receipts from lighthouses was 294,581l. In 1853, the royal navy numbered 545 ships of all classes, carrying 18,080 guns, 58,000 seamen, and 18,616 marines; total 76,616 men; and the British army numbered 214,421 men, exclusive of militia. In the same year the coinage was 12,664,126l. Births in do, 612,341; marriages, 162,135; deaths, 421,775; and the number of emigrants was 328,667. Number of miles of railways open in 1852, amounted to 6,890, employing 56,000 persons. The country is intersected by electric telegraph wires along the lines of railway, and England is connected by submarine telegraph with Ireland, also with France by the Dover and Calais submarine telegraph. In 1850 the number of coal mines in operation was 3,000, get of coal 34,000,000 tons yearly. The value of mineral produce in the United Kingdom for 1857 was, in tin, copper, lead, zinc, iron pyrites, arsenic, nickel & cobalt, iron ore, coals, barytes, & other minerals, 25,961,469l.; or adding salt, building stones, and miscellaneous products, the enormous total of 38,000,000l. annually. The government is a limited monarchy. The legislative authority is vested in the sovereign and the parliament (Lords and Commons), the concurrence of all which estates is necessary to the enactment of new laws, or to the repeal of those already in force. The House of Peers consists of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and is composed of princes of the blood royal, 2 archbishops, 24 English bishops, 4 Irish representative archbishops and bishops, 20 dukes, 21 marquises, 111 earls, 24 viscounts, 197 barons, with 16 Scotch and 28 Irish representative peers. The House of Commons consists of 654 members. The total voters in 1852 amounted to 1,179,108.

Nothing is known historically of Britain before the invasion of Caesar, except a few obscure allusions, about 55 B.C. It is conjectured to have been originally peopled from the adjoining continent, first by the Celts from Gaul, and afterwards by Teutonic tribes from Germany and Scandinavia. The original Gaelic name Albion (Albion "White Island"), is supposed to be derived from the appearance of its chalk cliffs.

Britia formed by the Romans into Britannia, is conjectured to have been the name of the people, signifying a divided or separated nation. After the invasion of Caesar, the Romans did not return to Britain for about a century; under Agricola, Antoninus Pius, Severus, Caracalla, it was subdued and occupied till about A.D. 190, when it was abandoned by the Romans. Agricola built a wall between the Firths of Forth and Clyde, in order to bound the empire and defend it from the Caledonians. Adrian erected a mud wall from the Solway Firth to the Tyne, and Severus built a stone wall in the same direction, portions of which still remain. After the termination of the Roman power, the greater part of Britain was conquered by the Saxons, Jutes, and Angles, the latter giving their name to England; this conquest occupied about 150 years. In 1066 the Normans made a descent on England, and possessed themselves of a great part of the country.
In 1172 Ireland was subdued, and came under British government. In 1215 Magna Charta was obtained by the Barons. In 1283 Wales was united to England. In 1604, the accession of James VI., united the crown of Scotland to that of England. A civil war in Britain terminated in the execution of Charles I. in 1649, followed by a commonwealth that lasted 11 years, in which Oliver Cromwell assumed the dictatorship. In 1660 monarchy was restored, when Charles II. ascended the throne of his father. William III. was called to the throne after the revolution of 1688. The legislative union of Scotland and England took place in 1707. The American war of independence began in 1776 and terminated 1781. The French revolution and war with France began in 1793, and terminated by the battle of Waterloo in 1815. The legislative union of Ireland with Britain took place in 1799. In 1829 the Catholic Emancipation Act was passed; and a reform of the British parliamentary representation was effected by the Act of 1832. In 1842, the tariff reform was begun, which has resulted in free trade; and in 1854, in alliance with France, war was declared against Russia, in consequence of its encroachments on Turkey. The cabinet council for carrying on the business of the state is composed of the president of the privy council, the lord high chancellor, first lord of the treasury,
lord privy seal, chancellor of the exchequer, minister of war, three secretaries of state, viz., home, foreign, and colonial affairs, the commander-in-chief of the forces, first lord of the admiralty, presidents of the boards of control (India), and of trade, secretary at war, and the paymaster-general. The courts of law and local government vary in different divisions of the empire; but each co. throughout the kingdom is governed by a lieutenant, sheriff, and other officers appointed by the crown. The episcopal form of church government, of which the sovereign is the head, is the state established religion in England and Ireland, and the presbyterian form that of Scotland. There is, however, the most complete toleration of all other religious sects throughout the empire. The most perfect degree of personal freedom is guaranteed by the Habeas corpus act, which secures to the suspected prisoner a trial or liberation within a limited time; the trial by jury, liberty of the press, liberty of conscience, and the total abolition of slavery. Each city and municipal borough has the election of its own separate corporate officers. The colonies have each a governor appointed by the crown; and who is assisted in each of the British North American colonies by a council and legislative assembly, as also in each of the West India islands, except St Lucia and Trinidad. These two islands, and British Guiana, Gibraltar, Malta, the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, the Mauritius, and Hong Kong, are placed under a governor and council, and the orders of the sovereign in council; the African settlements, all the Australasian colonies, the Falkland isls., and St Helena, are each ruled by a governor, council, and British Acts of Parliament; and Honduras is governed by a superintendent and magistrates.

The British Empire is the most powerful in the world, comprising a vast extent of territory, and an immense pop. Its subdivisions, with their

BRUNSWICK (DUCHY OF) (Germ. Braunschweig), a state of North Germany, situated (exclusive of Thedinghausen), between lat. 51° 38' and 52° 28' N., lon. 9° 23' and 11° 30' E. Pop. (1857), 269,915. Besides this, the reigning duke possesses the princip. of Oels in Silesia, with an area of 817 sq. m., and a pop. of 90,000. The state is composed of three large and six small isolated and irregular portions of territory. The principal part, with the cap. city, lies between Prussia and Hanover; the 2d extends E. to W. along the S. bound of Hanover, limited on the E. by Prussia, and W. by the Weser; the 3d lies S.W. of the above, between Prussia, Hanover, and Anhalt. The smaller portions lie partly in Hanover, and partly in Prussia; but, with the exception of Thedinghausen, they are not far distant from the capital.

The whole territory has an area of 1,526 sq. m. The country is mountainous in the two S. portions, which are partly traversed by the ramifications of the Harz mountains; the Worm-Berg, 3,230 feet in elevation, is the highest point in the duchy. It is badly watered; the Ocker flows N. and the Weser on the extreme W. limits of the territory; there are several small lakes in the Harz, and mineral springs at Helmstedt and Seesen. The climate is rigorous in the Harz, where harvest is a month later than in the rest of the territory. Agriculture is the chief source of the wealth of the duchy, the valleys of which are fertile. The principal products are grass, rye, barley, oats, seed-oil, flax, tobacco, chicory, hops, and fruits. Cattle-breeding is important, great care is bestowed in the improvement of horses, for which there is a stud in Harzburg, and the sheep are of improved breeds. Exports timber. Mining is carried on in the Harz mountains; its chief products are gold, silver, lead, litharge, copper, sulphur, vitriol, and alum. The iron-works employ 9 smelting houses and 10 furnaces; marble and alabaster are also procured. Manufs. are limited to tobacco, paper, soap, sal-ammoniac, and madder, linen and woollen weaving and spinning, and lacquered wares, glass, and beer. Trade is active, and is much facilitated by the two annual fairs at Brunswick, and by railways to Hanover, Magdeburg, and Neustadt. Has a college, an anatomical school, 5 gymnasia, and several other schools. The library of Wolfenbüttel is celebrated. Brunswick belongs with

BRUNSWICK, to the German commercial union. The government is exercised by a hereditary duke, and based on the constitution of 1833, with a single legislative chamber, composed of 8 deputies of the nobility, 12 from the towns, 10 from the rural districts, and 13 from the general pop. The court of appeal at Wolfenbüttel is the highest legal tribunal. Since 1833 the duchy has been divided into the 6 circs. of Brunswick, Helmstedt, Wolfenbüttel, Blankenburg, Ganderheim, and Holzminden. Public revenue for 1832-54, estimated at 4,052,500 thalers; expenditure, 4,052,500 thalers yearly. Public debt (1845), 6,444,394 thalers, of which 3,725,000 thalers was on account of railways. BURBIECH, an independent state of South America, separated from the Argentine Confederation in 1853. It extends from the Rio Negro or Conon on the S. (lat. $41^{\circ} S.$), along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Rio de la Plata, and along the S. shores of its estuary, and the S. banks of the Parana, as far as the Arroyo del Medio river, which separates it from Santa Fé about lat. $33^{\circ} S.$ The W. boundary extends from the mouth of the Neposta river in a N.E. direction, to the W. extremity of the Sierra del Volcan. Area estimated at about 200,000 sq. m. Pop. (1854) 350,000, army 6,970 men. The N. includes a portion of the eastern Pampas, and is flat, with lakes and swamps. The S. part comprehends the Sierra del Volcan, the S.E. the Sierra Ventana. Principal rivers, the Salada, Salta, and Quequin. Climate humid and variable; ice seldom occurs; mean summer heat 60° Fahr. The N. winds prevailing here have the disagreeable character of the sirocco of Italy; the S.W. winds or pamperos are hurricanes accompanied with thunder. There is sufficient rain in general throughout, but occasionally there are years of excessive and destructive droughts. The soil is fertile in many places, but it is estimated that there is not a thousandth part under cultivation. Value of its imports in 1851, 2,110,100; value of exports in do. 2,126,705. Number of cattle, 12,000,000; sheep, 6,000,000. Hides, hair, horns, tallow, and jerked beef are chief exports; horses, mules, and asses are also exported. The breed of sheep has been improved, and wool now forms an article of export. Formerly the cultivation of the soil was so neglected that grain was required from abroad; now, wheat is exported to some extent. Buenos Ayres became independent of the Spanish government in 1816, and along with the neighbouring states joined in a confederated republic (the Argentine or La Plata), which, however, was not long kept up, and now each state has a separate and independent administration. The executive is vested in a governor or cap.-general elected for five years, aided by a council of ministers chosen by the governor. The legislative assembly consists of 44 members, one half renewed annually by popular election. The religion of the state is Roman Catholic, but others are tolerated. A chain of forts has been established along the W. boundary to overawe the Indian population.

BURBIECH ("good air"), the cap. city of the province of same name, is situated on the S. of the Plata estuary, about 150 m. from the sea, opposite the town Colonia. Lat. $34^{\circ} 36' 29' S.$, lon. $58^{\circ} 23' 34' W.$ Pop. (1844) 122,000, of whom about one-fourth are Spanish or other European descent. It covers a surface of about 2 m. in length by $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in greatest breadth, and is regularly laid out, all its streets crossing each other at right angles, and now mostly paved with granite. Almost all its houses are but one story in height, flat-roofed, and built around courtyards. It is ill provided with water, which is wholly brought by carriers from the river. Principal edifices are its churches, cathedral, convents, protestant church, presbyterian chapel, founding hospital, and orphan asylum—all built of a fine white stone quarried near the city. The residence of the dictator and the government offices are in a fort near the river. The university occupies an extensive building, and has a valuable library; besides which there are a superior academy, a military college, various public schools, several printing establishments, and manufs. of cigars, carpets, furniture, boots and shoes. The navigation of the Plata, here 36 m. broad, is difficult; and ships drawing 16 feet water are obliged to anchor in the Amarradero, a roadstead 7 or 8 m. distant, to and from which merchandize has to be conveyed by lighters and rude ox-carts. In 1861, the exports were valued at 2,126,705*l.*, and the imports at 2,110,000*l.* Imports, ox-hides, precious metals, jerked beef, sheeps' wool, skins, tallow, and horse hair, cotton, linen, woollen, jewellery, perfumery, coarse cloths, soap, candles, and deals. During 1844, 468 ships cleared out, and in 1843, 52 ships entered. Buenos Ayres was founded in 1535; in 1775 it was made the seat of a vice-royalty. In 1806 it was taken by the English, but it was retaken by the Spaniards in the same year.

BURMAN or BIRMAN, the Burmese empire, or kingdom of Ava, a state of Further India, and formerly the most extensive and powerful in that peninsula; but, since the war of the Burmese with the British in 1824-6, its territories have been comprised within lat. 16° and 27° N., lon. 93° and 99° E., having W. Aracan and Mampoor, N. the Nagas territory and Upper Assam, E. the Chinese prov. Yun-nan, the indep. Laos country, and the British prov. Martaban (from which last it is separated by the Sa-luen or Than-Iweng river), and S. the Gulf of Martaban, a portion of the Bay of Bengal. Estimated area 255,000 sq. m., and pop. 3,000,000. It is composed of the kingdoms of Burmah, Pegu, and Pong, with portions of the countries inhabited by the Khyen, and the Shan countries, and the Kulo valley (Mampoor), re-annexed to it by treaty with the British in 1834. It is enclosed on most sides by mountain ranges, in elevation from 2,000 to 5,000 feet above the sea, its central part consisting of the basin of the Irrawadi. Lagoons are numerous in low beds of the S., and in the centre; a little N. of Ava is a lake 30 m. in length by 10 m. across. The country is reckoned salubrious. From May till the middle of September is the rainy season. From September till March the weather is delightful, the temperature seldom exceeding 75° Fahr.; in April and May the heat becomes great, but is soon mitigated by the commencement of rain. Annual fall of rain 150 to 300 inches. The soil is of high fertility; but except near the towns most of it lies waste, or is only irregularly tilled; and agriculture is generally in a backward condition. Rice is the chief crop, especially in the S.; pulses, Indian millet, and maize are raised in the N.; and sesamum is universally cultivated for cattle. Other products are cotton of short staple, indigo, yams, sweet potatoes, tobacco, capsicums, gourds, oil plants, bananas and other fruits, betel-nut and leaf, sugar cane, onions, garlic, and in the N. a kind of tea. Teak, oak, and other woods abound on the mountain ranges, and palm and bamboo are also plentiful. Oxen, elephants, horses, buffaloes, and goats are the domestic animals. Mineral products are gold, silver, iron, copper, lead, tin, amber, petroleum, marble, serpentine, sapphires and other gems, antimony, sulphur, nitre, and coal. In physical form, the Burmese are more allied to the Mongolians of E. Asia than to the Hindoos. Their figure is short, squat, robust, and fleshy, face lozenge-shaped, cheek bones large, and eyes obliquely placed. The hair is black, coarse and lank, and the colour of the skin, light brown or yellowish. From the difference of dialects, they may be divided into five tribes or nations. The language is monosyllabic, somewhat allied to the Chinese. They are of a gay disposition, and fond of amusements, but less civilized than the Hindoos or Chinese. Have boat-building, bell-casting, work in gold and silver, dye silk and other fabrics, weave silk and cotton goods, and manu. lacquered wares, paper, coarse earthenware, and some other articles; but most of their manufactured goods are imported from foreign countries. China sends silks, porcelain, copper, carpets, metals, drugs, and tea, in return for raw cotton, feathers, ivory, birds' nests, horns, gums, and British manu.; this intercourse being chiefly conducted at an annual fair at Bhamo. From the Shas tribes the Burmese obtain their best sword-blades, with lac, wax, and varnish, in return for salt and dried fish, British cotton goods, araca and cocoa nuts, tobacco, iron, hardware, copper, lead, and other minerals, opium, sugar, spirits, English glass, earthenware, firearms, and gunpowder, are imported by sea from British India and the Asiatic archipelago. The government is hereditary and despotic. Buddhism is the prevailing superstition; there are a few Christians and Jews, and the Khyens and other wild tribes have a special idolatry of their own. Education, in so far as mere reading and writing is concerned, is generally diffused. Public revenue is derived from a tithe of the profits of cultivation, duties of 10 per cent. on imports, and 5 per cent. on exports, on the petroleum collected, a royal monopoly of marble, amber, the precious metals, and gems above a certain size, and a poll tax on the unsettled tribes; but the whole fiscal system is "replete with uncertainty, rapacity, and violence." The Burmese empire is divided into 7 provs. Ava and Monchoho have alternately been constituted the capital. The other principal towns are Amaraapura, Sakaling, Kangoon, Bassein, Martaban, Setang, Taungo, Prome, Patango, Yandabo, and Bhamo. In 1823 the Burmese provoked war with the British, which lasted during the years 1824-5, and was renewed in 1852. In both cases it terminated in their defeat, and the cession of several territories to the English. [F. & N.]

Has markets for corn, cattle, and fuel, and is well supplied with vegetables and fruits. From its elevation, the winter in Cabool is long and severe, the summer is delightful; average temperature from 75° to 85° Fahr. The inhabitants are tall, well made, not very dark, and have Jewish features. They are Mohammedans of the Sonnee sect. The higher classes speak Persian, the common people the Pushto dialect. Taken by Sebutaghi in 977, by Tamerlane at the end of the 14th century, and in 1738 by Nadir Shah. Was the scene in 1842 of the treacherous outbreak of the chiefs, the murders of Sir W. Macnaughten and Sir A. Burnes, and the massacre of 3,800 soldiers, and 12,000 camp followers; was retaken in the same year by the British troops under Sir R. Sale, the bazaar and public buildings burned and finally relinquished. Its chiefship is considered to extend from the S. of Ghuznee to the Hindoo Koosh, and from Bamian to the Khyber mountains, comprising an area of about 10,000 sq. m., with the cities of Cabool, Istalif, Ghuznee, and Jelalabad. CAIRO or GRAND CAIRO (El Mahr, "the capital" of the Egyptians, El Kahrah, "the victorious" of the Arabs), the cap. of Egypt, residence of the viceroy and seat of government, near the rt. b. of the Nile, and 5 m. from the origin of its delta, and at termination of railway from Alexandria. Lat. 30° 2' 4" N., lon. 31° 15' 36" E., elevation 40 feet above the level of the sea. Pop., including the suburbs of Boulac and Old Cairo, estimated at 250,000, comprising about 125,000 Mohammedans, 60,000 Copts, 3,000 to 4,000 Jews, and numerous foreigners. Climate healthy and little variable. Mean temperature of the year 72° 2, of winter 58° 2, of summer 87° 1, Fahr. Rain very seldom occurs, but dew is abundant. The city proper is built on a slope at the foot of one of the lowest ridges of the chain of Jebel Mokkattam, and occupies an area of 3 sq. m.; it is surrounded by old walls, and the highest part of the ridge is occupied by a citadel, which contains the palace of the viceroy, the arsenal, mint, and public offices. The citadel is commanded by forts placed on the extremity of the chain of Mokkattam. The city is separated from its suburbs Boulac and Mahr-el-Aatik (improperly called Old Cairo), by a series of gardens and plantations. Cairo is divided into several distinct quarters according to the religion and race of its inhabitants, as the Coptic quarter, Jews' quarter, and Frank quarter, which are separated by gates. The city is traversed by a canal of irrigation, which commences at Old Cairo. The remarkable edifices of Cairo, which comprise many of the finest remains of Arabian architecture, all date from the reign of the Arabs and the ancient sultans of Egypt. Among these are from 300 to 400 mosques, several of the ancient gates, an aqueduct for conveying water from the Nile to the citadel, the ancient works of the citadel, and the palace and well of Joseph. At Old Cairo are the seven towers still called "the granary of Joseph," and serving their ancient purpose. In the island of Rhodah is the celebrated Nilometer, a graduated column for indicating the height of the water during an inundation of the river, numerous ancient cisterns and basins still ornament the city; on the S., outside the walls, are the tombs of the Mamelukes, and on the N.E. the obelisk of Heliopolis. There are four primary schools in Cairo, each having about 200 pupils, and one preparatory school with 1,500 pupils, museums of Egyptian antiquities, magnetic observatory, theatre, hospitals, and a lunatic asylum. There are two newspapers published here, one in Turkish and the other in Arabic. Cairo was long the chief entrepôt for the commerce of Egypt, but its trade has much declined; caravans arrive annually from Mourzouk, Senaar, and Darfur, and their principal imports still are slaves. [BOULAC.] [EGYPT] Cairo was founded by the Arabs in 670; its citadel was built by Saladin in 1178; was the capital of the sultans of Egypt till the time of the Turkish conquest in 1517; since that time it has been the residence of the Pashas, governors of the province; was taken by the French in 1798, and held by them for 8½ years.

CALCUTTA, the capital city of British India, presid. and prov. Bengal, on the l. b. of the Hooghly, an arm of the Ganges, and 100 m. from the Bay of Bengal. Lat. of Fort William, 22° 35' N., lon. 85° 30' E. Pop. (1850) 413,182, besides whom about 177,000 daily frequent the city from the vicinity. The population comprises Hindoos, Mussulmans, Europeans, Chinese, Jews, Armenians, and Persians. The city extends for 44 m. along the river, and is enclosed on the land side by a mound and canal, named the Maharrata ditch. It is divided into two distinct parts, that on the N. being the "Black Town," or native portion. The streets are narrow, and the buildings are occupied as bazars in the lower parts, and as dwelling-houses above. The S., called the "Chowringhee" or European portion, is the fashionable part. The streets are wide, and the houses detached in their own gardens. Public buildings are Fort William, the largest fortress in India, constructed at a cost of 2,000,000*l.*, is garrisoned by a detachment of artillery, an European, and two native regiments, it mounts 619 guns, and in the armoury are 60,000 stand of small arms; the government-house, mint, custom-house, town-hall, gaol, hospitals, & monasteries. There are churches and chapels of all denominations and creeds. The educational institutions comprise Hindoo, Mohammedan, Sanscrit, and Anglo-Indian colleges, grammar, and various other schools. The literary and scientific establishments comprise the Asiatic society, mechanics' institute, native medical college, physical and medical society, public library, horticultural and agricultural society, with botanic gardens.—Calcutta is the head-quarters of the governor-general, and of the government, the supreme courts of justice, and court of appeal for the presidency of Bengal, the seat of the chief bishop of the Church of England in India, and of the vicar-apostolic of the Roman Catholics. Several newspapers are published in the city, in the English and native languages. There are several banks, insurance, and navigation companies, and a chamber of commerce. Has a cannon foundry, sugar refinery, cotton, flour, saw and oil mills, and ship-building docks. The commerce of Calcutta is extensive, monopolizing the internal trade of Bengal. Imports silks, cotton goods, yarn, cutlery, wines, and spirits, amounting in 1850, to 1,961,704*l.* Exports sugar, opium, indigo, country made cotton piece goods, and ditto with silk piece goods, value 6,366,843*l.* In 1850, 1,023 ships, of 240,886 ton burden, arrived, and 876 ships, of 360,811 tons burden, cleared out. The Hooghly, opposite the city, is one mile across, and ships can anchor in six fathoms water. The navigation of the river is dangerous, on account of shifting sands and a rapid current. The coinage of the presidency are the gold mohur, silver rupee, and copper pice. The value of the mohur is 16 rupees, and a rupee is valued at 2s. English money. A railway from Calcutta to Ranagunge, 122 m. N.W., was opened in 1856, and is being extended to Rajmahal and Allahabad, in the valley of the Ganges. An electric telegraph has been formed between the city and Diamond Harbour, 50 m. down the river, and it is intended to carry it to its mouth. There is regular steam communication with England by the overland route, the mails being dispatched every fortnight. Average time on the voyage 42 days. The elevation of the city is 18 feet above the sea. Annual fall of rain, 64.1 inches; rainy season, March to November. Mean maximum temp. of year, 90° Fahr. European society is good, exhibiting much pomp and gaiety, with great formality. Equipages are very numerous, the esplanade (the Hyde Park of India) is a place of great resort, the evening drive being esteemed an indispensable luxury. The rich native families, who now assimilate in the splendour of their houses and equipages to the English, are of very recent origin, and owe their wealth and consequence to the commercial facilities which the city affords. In 1808, the seat of the East India Company's factory was removed from Hooghly to Calcutta, previously to which Calcutta was an inconceivable village surrounded with jungle. In 1756, an attack was made on the English factory by the natives, and 146 Englishmen were shut up in the "black hole," of whom 118 died before morning. In 1757 the fort was retaken, and has since remained in possession of the English.

The chief bays are San Francisco, Humboldt, Monterey, Pellico, Santa Barbara, and San Diego. Principal rivers are the Sacramento and San Joaquin, with their tributaries. The lakes are Tulare, Clear, Owen, Kern, and Bonpland. The climate is more genial than in the same latitude on the Atlantic border, the winter being short and generally mild. In the valleys the soil is very productive, yielding figs, dates, sugar, tobacco, wheat, rye, rice, coffee, cotton, and fruits of all kinds, but agriculture is neglected for gold digging. Minerals are important, and comprise coal, granite, marble, diamonds, iron, lead, copper, quicksilver, silver, and gold, which last is found in great abundance, and was accidentally discovered in 1848 in New Helvetia, on the banks of the Sacramento. The value sent to the United States in 1852, was 48,528,076 dollars, besides a large quantity removed privately out of the country. Has hot sulphur springs, from one to nine feet in diameter. The zoology comprises the grizzly bear, Californian lion, coyote (an animal between a fox and a wolf), elks, wild horses, and horned cattle, squirrels, etc. Birds and fishes of all kinds, and in abundance. In 1852, 718 ships, of 261,352 tons, entered, and 506 ships, of 540,872 tons, cleared. Imports comprise all kinds of goods, and exports gold dust. There are 23 churches of all denominations, several academies, 21 schools, attended by 3,314 pupils, employing 15 teachers, and supported from the sale of land set aside by the legislature for that purpose, and yielding already 30,000 dollars. The judiciary consists of a supreme court, with one chief and two subordinate judges, elected by the people for six years, besides district and county courts. The government consists of a governor, a senate of 33, and a house of representatives of 80 members, and sends two representatives to Congress. It has a state lunatic asylum, two hospitals, and a penitentiary.

The country, formerly divided by the Ottawa river into the provs. of Upper and Lower Canada, was united in 1841, though differing in laws, manners, and customs. For some purposes, the old divisions are still retained. The upper prov., or Canada West, has a level surface, except in the W., where a ridge of undulating heights, stretching from S.W. to N.E., forms the water parting between Lakes Huron and Superior. The upper prov. is watered by streams flowing S. to Lakes Erie and Ontario; the principal rivers are the Thames and the Ouse, which enters Lake Erie. The Niagara separates the peninsular portion of S.W. Canada from the State of New York on the E. Lower Canada or Canada East, is characterized by picturesque scenery; it is traversed from N.E. to S.W. by the Green mountains on the S. of the St. Lawrence, the Mealy mountains, which are always snow clad, and the Watchich mountains, between Hudson Bay and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Principal rivers, the St. Lawrence, forming, in part of its course, the boundary between Canada and the State of New York, and its tributaries, the principal of which are on the N., the Ottawa, formerly the boundary between the upper and lower provinces, which flows S.E. and joins the main stream at Montreal, the St. Maurice or Three Rivers which flows S. and joins it 70 m. W. of Quebec, and the Saguenay from Lake St. John. On the S. side of the St. Lawrence the chief affluents are the Richelieu, St. Francis, and Chaudiere, flowing northwards. Besides the great lakes Superior, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, the surface of the country is covered with sheets of water connected by numberless small streams. Climate excessive, the temp. ranging from 102° to 36° Fahr., but the dryness of the air, and the absence of high winds, greatly mitigate the cold of winter, and render the climate salubrious and conducive to longevity. Fogs are very rare. In 1848 the extent of occupied land in Upper Canada was 8,013,000 ac., of which 1,780,153 ac. were under cultivation, 768,708 ac. in pasture, and the remainder unenclosed. In the same year the live stock numbered 151,389 horses, 663,845 horned cattle, 833,807 sheep, and 484,211 swine. In 1844 (there being no return for 1848, there were in Lower Canada 2,802,317 ac. under tillage, yielding 11,445,757 bushels of grain and 9,918,609 bushels of potatoes. The live stock also numbered in the same year 140,728 horses, 400,851 cattle, 602,821 sheep, and 197,928 swine. Until recently, farming was carried on without any of the scientific systems introduced by agriculturists in England or Scotland, there being ac rotation of crop, the fields on getting exhausted being abandoned. By the emigration of scientific agriculturists, and the formation of agricultural societies, a great change has taken place: the abandoned lands are being reclaimed and judiciously treated, and a different and better kind of stock introduced. The chief agricultural products of the country include wheat, oats, barley, pears, potatoes, butter and cheese, beef, pork, mutton, and wool, besides hemp, flax, tobacco, maple sugar, timber, and fruit. In 1850, the imports amounted in value to 2,345,517L, and the exports of domestic produce amounted to 2,600,590L. In 1849, 1,245 vessels, of an aggregate tonnage of 502,513 tons arrived, and the customs duties in 1850 amounted to 615,094L 13s. 8d. Minerals comprise iron, lead, tin, copper, silver, marble, and lithographic stones. Wild animals include the bear, wolf, beaver, fox, otter, lynx, and wild cat. Birds consist of swans, turkeys, ducks, and many varieties of smaller birds. The fisheries on the coasts, lakes, and rivers, are highly important. The educational establishments are rapidly advancing in number and usefulness. The government educational grants for Lower Canada being 38,888L, and Upper Canada 26,848L. In 1851, the population, according to religion, was—

In 1852, there were in West Canada 8 colleges, with 721 students; 1 normal and 1 model school, with 245 students; 98 grammar schools, with 3,124 students; 3,010 common schools, with 179,587 pupils; 167 private schools, with 5,133 pupils—making a total of 3,285 educational establishments in operation, with 188,910 students and pupils. The entire population between the ages of 5 and 16 was, at the same date, 262,755. In East Canada, the number of schools in 1851 was 2,005. The number of children attending school was, at the same date, 79,248; adding to which the number of pupils attending the colleges and other educational institutes, estimated at 10,000, the total number of pupils would amount to 90,900. The press is advancing rapidly; the journals are unstamped, and there is no duty on paper or advertisements; there are 30 newspapers in East, and 30 in West Canada. Some of these are daily papers, and several of those in East Canada are entirely in the French language. Canada is peculiarly inviting as a field for emigrants, the soil being fertile and easily cultivated, with facilities for commerce on the rivers and lakes almost unbounded. Numerous railways, in progress or completed, excellent roads, and canals, open up the interior. Land is easily attainable. Crown lands in Lower Canada can be purchased at from 1s. to 4s. per acre, according to situation, the purchase-money being payable in five yearly instalments from the date of purchase. In Upper Canada the cost of land is 7s. 6d. per acre, the purchase-money being payable in ten yearly instalments. The colonial government will allot land without purchase, in either province, to the extent of 50 acres, to persons of 21 years of age and upwards, who have never received a grant of land from government, on giving security that they can support themselves till a crop be raised. The British and American Land Company sells its land in Lower Canada at from 2s. to 12s. per acre, and requires interest only for the first six years, and then allows four years for the payment of the principal. The Canada Company sells land on the S.E. shore of Lake Huron, at from 2s. to 24s. per acre, according to vicinity to the lake. Agricultural labourers are in demand, and wages are high. In 1851, the sum of 15,515L 16s. 10d. was remitted through the Canada Company alone by emigrants to their friends in the British Islands and Germany, to enable them to reach Canada. Average emigration from the United Kingdom to Canada for the seven years ending in 1848, was upwards of 37,000 annually. This country was discovered in 1499 by J. and S. Cabot, and acquired by the British between 1759 and 1763. In 1774, by an act of the British Parliament, a legislative council of 23 members was appointed to assist the governor. In 1791, two legislative chambers were constituted; and after several years of much discontent in the colonies, and at last an open rebellion in 1837-8, a bill was passed in 1839 to reunite the two provinces under the administration of a governor-general, a legislative council of not less than 22 elected by the crown, and a legislative assembly of 42 members from each prov. elected by the people, the electoral qualification being the possession of a 40s. freehold. Lower Canada is subdivided into the 4 districts of Quebec, Montreal, Three Rivers, and Gaspé, each of which has its judges, sheriffs, &c. The districts are subdivided into 40 counties, and upwards of 200 seignories and fiefs, and 180 townships. The seignories are old French divisions, and mostly inhabited by a pop. of French descent. In 1793 Canada was made an English bishopric. There are now bishops of Quebec, Montreal, and Toronto, besides Roman Catholic bishops, and Protestant dissenting ministers of all denominations.

CANARIES or CANARY ISLANDS, Fortunate Islands, an archipelago, Atlantic Ocean, 60 m. from the W. coast of North Africa, between lat. 27° 40' and 29° 25' N., lon. 15° 25' and 18° 16' W. They consist of 7 principal islands and several islets, arranged in the following order from E. to W.:—Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the islets Graciosa, Santa Clara, Alegranza, and Lobos; Gran Canaria, Tenerife, Gomera, Palma, and Hierro (Ferro). Area of the whole estimated at 4,060 sq. m. Pop. (1857) estimated at 277,146. The coasts of these islands are rocky and abrupt, and they are covered with mountains, some of which attain a great elevation, the Pico de Teide in Tenerife being 12,182 feet. Their geological formation consists of a continuous series of volcanic mountains, which rise in a circular form from the coast around a principal crater, which serves as axis; the greater part of them are deeply indented, and in the form of a cone reversed. The surface is volcanic, presenting a succession of mountains and plains, extinct craters and fertile valleys. There are no rivers, but numerous torrents. The tropical heat is moderated by the Atlantic breezes, and the climate is equable. Winter is almost unknown on the coasts. In October the warmest month, the temperature varies from 75° to 81° Fahr.; and in January the coldest, it is from 60° to 66° Fahr. near the sea, decreasing with the elevation. The rainy season commences in November and continues till February. During the dry season, from April to October, the weather is uniformly fine, and the trade winds blow steadily E. and S.E. winds are the scourge of these islands; blowing over the burning plains of Africa, they carry an intensely hot and dry air, which destroys vegetation and induces disease. In 1704 the Canaries suffered severely from this cause. Fresh water is so scarce, especially in the E. parts of the islands, as in some seasons to induce many of the inhabitants to emigrate. The vegetation of these islands is not less interesting than their geological formation [Johnson's Physical Atlas.] The chief productions are wine, oil, grain, the sugar-cane, and fruits of all kinds; and the surrounding seas abound in fish. The principal foreign trade is carried on with the U. S. of North America, England, and Hamburg, and there is considerable commerce between the different islands. The annual produce is estimated at 170 qrs. of grain, 54,000 pipes of wine, 300,000 quintals of barley, and 200,000 barrels of potatoes. The goat is among the most valuable animals; dogs are numerous, and all the domestic animals of Europe are easily naturalized. The camel and the ass are used as beasts of burden. Among birds are the vulture, bustard, pheasant, wood pigeon, red partridge, blackbird, lark, and the thistle finch or canary bird. The inhabitants are of European origin, mostly Spaniards. Since 1493 these islands have belonged to Spain, of which kingdom they form a prov. governed by the same laws as the peninsular portion; the cap. of the whole archipelago is Santa Cruz de Tenerife.

CANARY ISLAND (Spanish Gran Canaria), an island near the centre of the group of the Canaries, of a circular form. Area 758 sq. m. Pop. 57,626. CANTERBURY, a city, borough, and county of itself, England, and its metropolitan see, within co. Kent, on the Stour, 83 m. E.S.E. London, with a station on the South Eastern Railway. Lat. 51° 10' 48" N., lon. 1° 4' 31" E. Area, which includes 14 par., 3,240 ac. Pop. 18,398. Its cathedral, erected in 12th and two following centuries, on the site of the first Christian church built in Saxon England, is in the form of a double cross, with a central and two western towers, and presents a union of almost every style of Christian architecture. The choir is large, and the pavement of the chapel of the Holy Trinity is worn into hollows by the knees of the pilgrims who here worshipped at the shrine of Thomas à Becket. A chapter-house and a library are attached to the cathedral, under which is a crypt, used as a French Protestant church since the reign of Elizabeth. The pa. churches are mostly ancient, but possess little interest. The grammar school was founded by Henry VIII. There are numerous other endowed schools; an infirmary, guild-hall, gaol, house of correction, work-house, exchange, theatre, and philosophical institution, with a library and museum. In the vicinity are woolen mills, but the chief business is the export of agricultural produce, especially of hops. Fetty-sessions, Thursdays. Quarter-sessions are also held. Canterbury sends two members to House of Commons. Registered electors (1850) 1,940. The archbishopric was founded in 597. The archbishop is "primate of all England," and the first peer of the realm, next to the royal family. He crowns the sove-privileges has that of conferring degrees in divinity, law, and medicine.

CANTON (Chinese Sang-Ching, the "provincial city"), a city and seaport of China, cap. prov. Quanton, on l. b. of the Canton or Pearl (Choo-keang) river, about 70 m. from its mouth, in the China Sea. Lat. 23° 0' 9" N., lon. 113° 13' E. Mean temperature of year, 69° 9; winter, 54° 8; summer, 82° Fahr. Pop. estimated at upwards of 1,000,000. With its suburbs it occupies the N. bank of the river, extending inland nearly to a row of heights commanding it on the N. and N.E., but between which and the city is a broken ravine; to the S. is an alluvial plain, formed by the delta of the river. The city is enclosed by a wall of brick, on a foundation of red sandstone, 6 or 7 m. in circumference, and entered by 12 gates; and it is unequally divided by another wall with 4 gates, into the old and new town, in the former of which are the residences of most of the high officers, and the arsenal. The walls are in some places mounted with cannon. On the N. heights are four forts, and on some islands in the river are other forts, termed the "Dutch," and the "French folly." Various detached batteries also guard the approach to the city by the river. The suburbs are nearly as large as the city itself; on the S. they stretch all along the river side; and at their S.W. corner are the hongs or European quarter—a range of buildings about 1½ furlong in length, built upon a flat raised on piles, and separated from the river by a quay 100 yards in breadth, called Respondentia Walk. There are 18 hongs, which merely consist of four or five brick or stone houses, ranged around a closed court; two of these being partly occupied by European hotels. Near the quay is another small space, about 50 or 60 yards square, walled in and laid out as a garden; and the above narrow limits comprise all the territory assigned to foreigners. Contiguous to the hongs are Old and New China Streets, and Hog Lane. Several canals intersect the city, and are crossed by stone bridges. The residences of the wealthy are built within a walled court, and are richly furnished; those of the middle class, in which about one-third of the pop. resides, have no courts; and those of the lower orders, which are numerous, along the banks of the canals and in the suburbs, are mud hovels, in which from 10 to 30 persons are sometimes crowded in one apartment. A large part of the pop. resides on the water. The river is crowded with vessels and rafts of all kinds, on many of which large numbers of poultry are reared. Upwards of 120 temples are enumerated in and adjacent to Canton. [HO-KAN.]

Within the old city are two other temples, and a Mohammedan mosque; and outside of the walls, on the N. side, is a pagoda. The city has several hospitals, a grand hall for examination of candidates for literary honours, 14 high schools, and about 30 colleges, 3 of which have each 200 students. Manufactures various and extensive, and the shops are filled with articles of Chinese workmanship. Great numbers of individuals work in wood, stone, iron and brass. The markets abound with all kinds of live stock for food, including dogs, cats, owls, etc., suitable only for Chinese consumers; but provisions of all kinds are abundant and cheap. Canton is well supplied with water from reservoirs and springs. Until 1843, all the legitimate foreign trade of China was conducted at Canton. Tea is the great article of foreign export; next to which come silk and silk piece goods, the precious metals, camels, sugar, porcelain, and many other inferior articles. The importation of opium into Canton and other ports, is tacitly permitted, though not legalised. [CHINA.] The exports in 1845, amounted in value to 6,322,720*l.*, and the imports to 3,046,942*l.* On the 26th of May 1841, the Chinese troops were defeated, and the river defences and the hill forts above Canton captured by the British, who, however, did not enter the city, a truce having been forthwith agreed to. In 1847, and again in 1856, for similar reasons, the British destroyed the forts, bombarded and took the city, and sunk 23 war-junks. [CHINA.]

CANTON, numerous townships in the U.S., North America.—I. Massachusetts, co. Norfolk, on the Boston and Providence Railway, 14 m. S.W. Boston. Pop. 2,598. Has woollen and cotton factories and iron foundries.—II. New York, cap. co. St. Lawrence, on Grass river, here crossed by a bridge, 30 m. E.S.E. Ogdensburg. Pop. 4,686. Has marble, copperas, and alum works.—III. Ohio, cap. co. Stark, 104 m. N.E. Columbus. Pop. 4,326.—IV. Connecticut, co. and 13 m. N.W. Hartford. Pop. 1,994; and several others.

CANTON RIVER (Chinese Choo-Keang or "Pearl River"), is the lower part of the Pe-kiang, which has a navigable course for 300 m. further inland, through the provs. Quang-tong and Kiang-see, in China, and is joined about 4 m. W. of Canton by a branch from the Si-kiang, opposite Canton; is crowded with shipping, and deep enough for ships of from 800 to 1,000 tons; but foreign ships come up only as far as Whampoa, about 15 m. lower, loading and unloading by means of native boats. At about 40 m. below Canton, it is called the Boca Tigris, and widens there into a large estuary, termed the "Outer Waters." All around and below Canton, it forms a multitude of islands, including Ho nau, Whampoa, French, Dane, Junk, Ty-cock-tow, Anung-hoy, Chuenpoo, Tiger island, on which rice is grown and numerous forts are placed. It was blockaded by the British in 1867. [BOCA TIGRIS.]

CAPES ANN, a promontory of the U. S., North America, Massachusetts, lat. (N. light) 42° 38' 21" N., lon. 70° 34' 48" W.

CAPES BRETON, an insular colony of British North America, at the E. extremity of Nova Scotia, mostly between lat. 45° and 47° N., lon. 60° and 61° 30' W. Extreme length from N. to S., 100 m.; extreme breadth from E. to W. 85 m. Area 3,190 sq. m. Pop. 35,000. It is irregularly shaped, and indented with bays; almost intersected by an arm of the sea called the Bras d'Or. Surface uneven. Granite, limestone, and primary slate prevail; and gypsum, salt, and coal are found. The land to the N. has an elevation of 1,900 feet. There are fresh water lakes and rivers, but not navigable. Salt springs on the coast. The climate is varied. Vegetation is rapid. Maize and other grains are raised; but the corn produced is insufficient for home consumption. Principal exports are pine, oak, birch, and maple timber to Great Britain; fish and coal to the United States and West India. Total value of exports (1844) 70,872*l.*; those to the other British North American colonies amounting to 44,576*l.* Value of imports, 24,323*l.* In the same year 583 ships, aggregate burden 37,574 tons, entered, and 631 do., burden 41,203 tons, cleared from the ports of the colony. The pop. is mostly of French, Scotch, or Irish descent. This w. and forms a colony under the government of Nova Scotia, and sends 2 members to its House of Assembly. Principal towns, Sydney, the cap. Arichat, and Port Hood. Cape Breton was first colonised by the French in 1712, and taken by the British in 1758.

CAPES CHARLES, a headland of the U. S., North America, Maryland, on the N. side of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay.

CAPES CHARLES, a headland of British North America, Labrador, immediately N. the Strait of Bellefleur. Lat. 52° 25' N., lon. 58° 10' W.

CAPES CLEAR, the most S. headland of Ireland, Munster, co. Cork, on an island having an area of 1,606 ac. Pop. 819; with a lighthouse on an abrupt cliff 455 feet above the sea, lat. 51° 26' N., lon. 10° 29' W.

CAPES CRIST CASTLE, a town and fort of Africa, cap. of the British settlements on the coast of N. Guinea. Lat. 5° 5' 25" N., lon. 1° 13' 45" W. The principal fort is situated on a granite rock which projects into the sea; near it are two small outposts, Fort William and Fort Victoria. Pop. 10,000. The soil in the vicinity is wooded, but deficient in water; climate damp and unhealthy. Mean temp. of year 78°; Feb. 80°; Sept. 75° Fahr. Exports, palm-oil, gold-dust, maize, and tortoise-shell. The settlement is under a president and council, assisted by subordinate officers.

CAPES CON, a peninsula of the U. S., North America, Massachusetts, in the Atlantic, lat. of lighthouse, 42° 3' 23" N., lon. 70° 3' 55" W. It is hook-shaped; 65 m. in length by 8 m. average breadth; and encloses Cape Cod Bay.

CAPES GIRARDEAU, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S.E. of Missouri, on the Mississippi River. Area 864 sq. m. Pop. 13,912, of whom 1,674 were slaves. —II. a vill. in same co. Pop. 1,728.

CAPES OF GOOD HOPE, an important colony of Great Britain, occupying the S. part of the peninsula of Africa, between lat. 26° 30' and 34° 51' S., lon. 17° 10' and 29° 20' E.; bounded S. and E. by the Indian Ocean, Kaffraria, Natal, and the Drakenberg Mountains, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the Orange and Vaal Rivers. Length W. to E. from the mouth of the Orange River to the Drakenberg Mountains, 900 m.; average breadth 400 m. Area estimated in 1849 at 118,268 sq. m.; but the recent extension to the Orange River adds about 50,000 m. to the territory. Pop. (1849) 283,279. The country is formed by terraces, rising in stages from S. to N. The chief mountain chains are the Drakensteen, Zwartenberg, and Sneeuw-Bergen, in which last is the Spitzkop or Compass-berg, the culminating point of the whole, estimated at 10,250 feet in elevation. Table Mountain, at the S.W. extremity of the colony, is an insulated flat topped mass, 3,582 feet in height, the S. point of which forms the promontory of the Cape of Good Hope, 1,000 feet in elevation, in lat. 34° 22' S., lon. 18° 29' E. It was discovered by Dias, a Portuguese admiral, in 1496, and called by him "Cape of Storms." Cape Agulhas, the next remarkable promontory, is the southernmost point of Africa, in lat. 34° 51' S., lon. 20° 3' E.; it gives its name to an extensive sand bank, and to an important current which flows from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. The most extensive plain is the Great Karoo, an arid tract upwards of 200 m. in length, and 50 in breadth, between the Zwartveld and the Nieuwveld mountains. The only passage from one terrace to another is through the Kloof, narrow and difficult mountain gorges; some of these have been made passable for wheeled carriages, but the roads in general are very bad. The principal bays are (from W. to E.) St Helena, Table, False (the W. part of which forms Simon Bay), St Sebastian, Mosel, Plettenberg, and Algoa. Streams are numerous, but rapid, mostly dry in summer, and unfit for navigation; the chief are on the S. and S. coast, Keiskamma, Great Fish, Bushman, Sunday, Camtoos, and Breede; on the W. Berg and

Elephant or Oliphant; and on the N. several small streams tributary to the Orange. The Orange River sovereignty was abandoned in May 1864. Climate mild and healthy, but very dry; rains irregular, often falling in torrents on the coast, but rare in the plains of the interior. Snow falls only in the mountains, and is not permanent. December and January are the warmest, and June and July the coldest months. The colony is remarkably free from epidemic disease, yet few of the inhabitants attain an advanced age. Soil fertile where sufficiently watered, but the general appearance of the country is sterile and monotonous. The arid steppes or *Karoo*s of the interior are destitute of trees and covered with an ephemeral vegetation only after heavy rains. The flora of the colony is of a peculiar and varied character, which is more remarkable for variety and beauty of the flowers than for their uses. The most valuable is the aloe, the produce of which has been exported in one year to the amount of 2,794*l.*; a species of soda, found in the Karoo, is employed in the manu. of soap, and candles are made from the covering of the waxberry. European grains, and the fruits of temperate and tropical regions have been successfully introduced. Corn is raised more than requisite for consumption, and the cultivation of the vine is an important source of wealth; a good white wine is produced in the interior, but only the small vineyard at the foot of Table mountain produces the celebrated liquor called Constantia. Cattle rearing is the chief branch of rural industry; and the introduction of the merino sheep has rendered the rural trade of the colony important. The coasts abound with fish. Gold has been discovered in the basin of the Orange River. Has copper mines yielding 60 to 70 per cent. of pure metal. Some of the wild animals of Africa are still met with, but the larger species decrease in proportion as colonization extends. The lion, hyena, buffalo, hippopotamus, and zebra are occasionally seen; the rhinoceros is rare, and the elephant is driven beyond the boundary. The ostrich is found on the plains, and the eagle in the mountains. Snakes are numerous. The commerce of the colony is extensive; the ports are Cape Town and Simon Town in the W., and Port Elizabeth in the E. Total value of exports in 1849, 547,647*l.* Imports during the same year, 829,382*l.* The colony consists of an E. and a W. division, and these are divided into 21 districts, viz.—Cape Division, Stellenbosch, Malmesbury, and Paarl, in the S.W.; Swellendam, Caledon, George, Uitenhage, Albany, Port Beaufort, and Port Elizabeth, on the E. coast; Clanwilliam, on the N.W.; Worcester, Beaufort, Graaf Reynet, and Somerset, in the interior; Colesberg, on the N.E.; Cradock, Victoria, Albert, and British Kaffraria, on the E. The capitals have the same names as the districts, except Albany, the cap. of Graham Town; and Alice, the cap. of Victoria. Stellenbosch is the chief wine, and Swellendam, the principal corn growing district; the others are mostly appropriated to grazing. The government is vested in a legislative council, consisting of 5 official members, viz., the governor, the second in command of the forces, colonial secretary, attorney-general, and treasurer, and 5 unofficial members, inhabitants of the colony, nominated by the governor; its debates are published. The Dutch founded a colony at the Cape in 1652, which was taken by the British in 1795. [CAPE TOWN]—ORANGE RIVER SOVEREIGNTY.]

scendants of the original Dutch settlers, have lost much of their ancestral industry and cleanliness; they are affectionate in their family relations, strict in religious observances, but prejudiced and illiterate. The only educational institutions of importance were, till 1839, the South African College and the South African Institution, at Cape Town; but a comprehensive system, embracing primary and classical schools, was then instituted by the government. In many of the districts are missionary schools, supported by different Protestant societies. The English language alone is used in courts of law, but Dutch is also taught in government schools. The money in use is exclusively British, and Dutch weights and measures are nearly superseded by the English. The peace of the colony is frequently interrupted by incursions of the Kaffers and other savage tribes on the frontiers. The Cape Division has a pop. of 8,798.

CAPE HATTERAS, a headland of the U. S., North Amer. N. Carolina, at the angle of a long reef which lines the coast. Lat. 35° 14' N., lon. 75° 30' W.

CAPE RIVER or TAURUS, a river of Central America, Nicaragua and Mosquito Country, enters the Caribbean Sea at Cape Gracias a Dios, after a N.E. course, estimated at from 280 to 300 m., through a fertile territory. It is navigable from the sea for a considerable distance inland.

CARNAUM, an ancient city of Palestine, near Damascus, supposed to have been at Khan-Mineh, on the W. shore of Lake Tiberias, 6½ m. N.W. Tiberias.

CAPISTANO, a comm. and town of France, dep. Herault, cap. cant., on the Canal du Midi, and near the head of a pool (étang) of the same name, 47 m. W.S.W. Montpellier. Pop. 2,135.

CAPSTAKE (LA) or LE MARIGOT, a town of the isl. Gadeloupe, French Antilles, cap. cant., on its E. coast, 13 m. E.N.E. Basseterre; in a healthy and fertile situation. Pop. 3,784, of whom 3,069 were slaves.

CAPE TOWN, a fortified seaport town of Southern Africa, cap. of the Cape Colony on its W. coast at the N. declivity of Table mountain, and on the S.W. shore of Table Bay. Lat. of observatory 33° 56' S., lon. 18° 28' E., 32 m. N. "the Cape." Mean temperature of year 67° 3; summer, 70° 6; winter 58° 3, Fahr. Pop. (1849) 23,749. It is laid out in the Dutch style, with canals in the principal streets; the houses are flat-roofed and painted or white-washed, with terraces in front. The public buildings of importance are the commercial exchange, and 15 churches and chapels. Has a royal marine and a magnetic observatory. The educational establishments are the South African College and the South African Institution, a public library, and a valuable private botanic garden. There are several banks, and numerous industrial establishments. Cape Town was constituted a bishopric in 1847. Table Bay is capacious, but is exposed to W. winds, which from June to August produce heavy swells; its N.W. point is marked by two lighthouses. The first Parliament elected by the colonies under the constitution granted by the Queen, was opened here 1st July 1854.

CAPE VERD, the most W. cape of Africa, in the Atlantic Ocean, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia. Lat. 14° 45' N., lon. 17° 34' W. Its name is derived from a group of enormous baobab-trees which crown its summit.

CAPE VERD ISLANDS, a group of islands in the Atlantic, belonging to Portugal, situated 32½ m. W. of the cape, between lat. 14° 45' and 17° 13' N., lon. 22° 45' and 25° 25' W. The archipelago consists of the following 10 isls., Sal, Boavista, Mayo, Santiago (St. James), the largest, Fogo, Brava, Grande, Rombo, St. Nicolau, and S. Luzia, and 4 islets, Branco, Razo, S. Vicente, and S. Antão. Area estimated at 1,690 sq. m. Pop. (1854) 65,963; 61,834 free, and 3,979 slaves. In 1855 it was estimated at 90,000, the white pop. in the whole archipelago is to the coloured as 1 to 20. The surface of the isls. is in general mountainous, and some of their peaks have a considerable elevation. The volcano of Fogo is 9,157 feet above the sea. The soil is various but fertile; the absence of trees and the scarcity of water are the causes of frequent and severe distress. Climate very hot, but tempered by the sea breezes; mean temperature of May and Aug. 70° 9; April to Sept. 70°, during the other months 65° Fahr.; the mornings and evenings are cool, and dews abundant. Chief vegetable products, maize, rice, and French beans. Coffee, introduced in 1790, has completely succeeded; the cotton shrub is indigenous; indigo grows wild, and tobacco is cultivated in some of the isls.; tropical fruits are abundant. Orchil, the trade in which was formerly monopolized by the government, and yielded an annual revenue of 24,000*l.*, decreased in value so rapidly, after the trade was thrown open in 1837, as to require new restrictions, which were put in force in 1844. Cattle are reared. Goats and pigs are numerous. Asses and mules are the beasts of burden. Fowl are abundant. Whales abound in the neighbouring seas, and are fished by the English and Americans. Amber is found on all the coasts, which are frequented by turtle. The natives are quiet and docile, but indolent; the Portuguese language is corrupted into a jargon called lingua creola. Agriculture and the preparation of salt are chief branches of industry; linen, pottery, ware, soap, and leather, are manuf. in some of the isls. In 1843-4, 217 ships entered, and 239 left the ports of the archipelago. Value of imports, 19,000*l.*, exports 17,000*l.* These isls., together with the Portuguese possessions on the continent of Africa, near Cape Roxo, constitute the provinces of Cape Verd, the cap. of which was removed from Porto Praya to Mindello in the isl. St. Vincent, in 1838. The prov. is under a governor-general, who exercises both civil and military power. The military force comprised in 1843, 534 men. Previous to 1840, there was only 1 school of public instruction in the archipelago, since then there are 12. The Roman Catholic is the only form of worship.

CAROLINA (North), one of the U. S., North America, in the South part of the Union, mostly between lat. 33° 30' and 36° 30' N., lon. 75° 10' and 84° W., having N. Virginia, W. Tennessee, S. Georgia and South Carolina, and E. the Atlantic. Length 430 m.; breadth 180 m. Area about 45,000 sq. m. Pop. (1860) 868,963, of whom 283,412 were slaves. The coast is bordered with sandy islands; a marshy flat extends from the sea inland for 60 or 80 m., intersected by creeks and estuaries, the principal of which are Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds, having between them the great Alligator swamp. N. of this, extending into Virginia, is the great Dismal swamp. The cultivated portion of the state is undulating and fertile; and its E. part comprises a portion of the Appalachian mountain chain, which here rises in several peaks to upwards of 4,000 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Roanoke, Chowan, Neuse, Cape Fear, Pamlico, and Yadkin. The climate of the low swampy plains is unhealthy; on the elevated parts of the state the air is pure and salubrious. Rice and cotton are the chief crops in the lowlands; wheat, rye, barley, oats, and flax, are produced elsewhere; tobacco, maize, and various fruits, including grapes, are raised in every part. The pitch pine is of prevalent growth, and affords tar, turpentine, pitch, and wood for export. Hogs are reared. Principal mineral products, iron and gold. In 1853, 249 m. of railways had been completed in this state. Owing to the want of harbours, most part of the foreign trade is conducted through the adjacent states. In 1850, the exports (chiefly rice, cotton, and pine timber) amounted in value to 418,501 dollars; value of imports 323,632 dollars. The first permanent settlement made in N. Carolina was about 1660: it and S. Carolina were called the country of Albemarle. The constitution (adopted 1776) consists of a senate of 60, and a house of commons of 120 members, and a governor, elected biennially by the people. It is divided into 79 cos., and sends 8 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Raleigh the cap., Wilmington, Fayetteville and Newbern.

CAROLINA (South), one of the U. S., North America, in the south part of the Union, mostly between lat. 32° and 35° N., lon. 78° 24' and 83° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic, and on other sides North Carolina and Georgia. Length 200 m.; breadth 125 m. Area 24,000 sq. m. Pop. 698,007, of whom 384,926 were slaves. The coast is bounded by a chain of isls. Surface low and marshy for 100 m. from the coast; which region is succeeded by one of sand hills; country further inland is undulating, fertile, and salubrious, rising at the N.W. extremity into the Appalachian mountain chain, which, in Table mountain, reaches to an elevation of 4,000 feet. Chief rivers the Great Pedee, Santee, Edisto, and Savannah. Products are cotton and rice; the islands bordering the coast produce the famous sea-island cotton. In 1850, upwards of 180,000,000 lbs. of rice, were raised in this state. Maize, wheat, and other grains, short stapled cotton, tobacco, indigo, sugar and silk, are the other products. Live stock numerous. Value of exports (1853) 11,647,360 dollars; but a large proportion of the exports from Georgia, come through the port of Charleston. CASHGAR, Chinese-Turkestan. [KASHGAR.]

CASHMERE, an extensive tract of country of Northern India, constituting the dominions of Gholab Singh, situated between lat. 32° 17' and 36° N., lon. 73° 20' and 76° 40' E. It is separated on the N. and E. from Tibet by the Karakoram mountains; on the S. by the Punjab and the British dists. of Spiti and Lahoul; and on the W. by the Punjab and the Huzareh country. Area 25,000 sq. m. Pop. (in 1827) estimated at 800,000; but since that time, owing to earthquakes, cholera, and famine, it had declined to 200,000. The valley of Cashmere has an average elevation of 5,500 or 6,000 feet above the sea. Several mountains around it rise to 15,000 feet, and one in E. Cashmere reaches to 19,500 feet in height. The country is well watered by the Jhelum river and its tributaries. There are about a dozen of passes through the mountains, four of which are practicable at all times of the year. The Pir Panjal Mountains are of basalt, and limestone and marble are common, but primary rocks rare, and few metals or important minerals. There are three lakes in the valley of Cashmere connected with the Jhelum river. Snow covers the country for five winter months, but the temperature then is seldom much below the freezing point. Rain falls copiously in spring and early summer. The summer heat varies from 75° to 85° Fahr. Earthquakes are common; in 1828, 1,300 persons perished by one. The soil on the bases of the mountains and valley is a rich loam, with sub-soil of clay. Rice is the principal crop; wheat, maize, millet, barley, melons, cucumbers, and other European fruits and vegetables; tobacco, cotton, oil-seeds, and Indian hemp are also raised. The water-lily and water-nut (trapa-bispinosa), grow in abundance. Bees, kept in hives constructed in the houses, produce excellent honey. The natives are of a tall robust frame of body, with manly features—the women full-formed and handsome, with aquiline nose and features, resembling the Jewish. Dress of both sexes a long loose woollen wrapper and trousers. The language is a dialect of Sanskrit with a mixture of Persian. The country abounds with monuments. The staple wealth of Cashmere long consisted in its shawls, woven from the inner hair or down of tame and wild goats and sheep, fed on the table-land of Tibet, and which article is imported by way of Lash in Little Tibet. Some years ago the annual value of the shawls manufactured in Cashmere was estimated at 300,000; but the amount has since diminished, without the manufacture itself having at all deteriorated. Other manufa. are lacquered wares in great variety, leather, saddlery, paper, attar of roses, cutlery, glass-ware, and articles in rock-crystal and chalcidony. Inhabitants mostly Mohammedans. Cashmere contains 10 towns, and upwards of 2,000 vills. Principal towns, Srinagar or Cashmere, Chapinisa, Islamabad, and Pampur. It is considered a holy land by Hindus; and it has numerous Buddhist antiquities. In 1586 the country was conquered by the Mogul Emperor Akbar. In 1762 it was subjugated by the Afghans, and remained under their sway till it fell into the power of the Sikhs in 1819, from which time till 1846 it was ruled by a governor of the maharajah of the Punjab. Towards the end of 1845, the Sikh army invaded part of the British territory, which led to hostile operations, and resulted in the occupation of Lahore by the British, when a treaty was concluded, which, as indemnification for the expenses of the war, the hill country between the Beas and the Indus, including the prov. of Cashmere, was ceded to the British, who transferred the larger portion to Gholab Singh, in independent possession for a pecuniary equivalent. By terms of the treaty, the supremacy of the British is acknowledged by Gholab Singh, who is bound to assist them with troops under certain contingencies, and in return, aid is to be given him in resisting his enemies. In 1849, the military force of the ruler of Cashmere consisted of 20,418 infantry, 1,972 cavalry, 1,200 artillery, exclusive of an irregular force furnished by his feudal chiefs. [SKRIVAGGER.]

CASPIAN SEA (Mare Caspium or Hyrcanum), an inland sea or salt-lake of West Asia, and the largest of its kind known on the globe, between lat. 38° 40' and 47° 20' N., lon. 48° 30' and 58° 10'

E, enclosed by the dunes of Rasak, the Kirghis, Khiva, and Portia. Length N to S. about 700 m, greatest breadth about 270 m, though the average does not exceed 200 m, and in some places it is not more than 180 m across. Estim. area 140,000 sq m. Coast line irregular, especially on the E side, where are the Gulfs of Mertvol, Mangushlak, Kendurinsk, Kara buzors, and Bulan. Opposite the last, the peninsula of Apheron (celebrated for its naphtia), stretches into it on its W side. The S coast is almost unbroken, and bounded at a short distance by lofty mountains. Its N shores are low and marshy or composed of sandy flats and broken into countless islets, especially about the mouth of the Volga. The Caspian contains several islands chiefly on its E side. Depth of water along the coast is considerable, and even several miles from the shore it rarely exceeds 12 feet, but in the center it varies from 120 to 180 feet and in one place no bottom was found at 450 fathoms. Its surface is now estimated to be 8½ feet below the level of the Black Sea (or by a later estimate, only 3½ feet), and the difference is supposed to be augmenting by the lower sea of the Caspian, a phenomenon, remarkable on account of the vast quantity of water which it receives from the Volga, Ural, Terek, Kur, and other rivers but due probably to its extensive evaporating surface. The water of this sea is not nearly salt as that of the ocean. It has no tides and in winter its N part is covered with ice. Sturgeons, salmon sterlets, and seals are abundant and many fisheries are carried on in this sea, the traffic of which is nearly monopolized by Astakhin, Gark, Krasnov, Ural, Dzhend, Bukh, Ural, and Baltash are the other towns on its coasts. The Caspian was known to the Greeks and Herodotus. Strabo derives its name from the Caspia who inhabited its S coast. The navigation is difficult. Steam jacks have now been established in it, and it is the rendezvous of a small fleet of Russian ships.

CASTILE (Span. Castilla), a former kingdom of Spain, which occupied the central table-land of the peninsula, composed chiefly of tertiary formation, and elevated 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. In the 10th century this region was a country, of which Burgos was the capital; at the commencement of the 11th century it was erected into a kingdom, and was successively extended by the addition of the kingdoms of Leon, Retremadura, and Andalucia. The marriage of Ferdinand, king of Aragon, with Isabella of Castile, in 1474, united under one sceptre all the Christian states of Spain, and the conquest of Granada, in 1492, led to the establishment of the kingdom of Spain. From the great importance of Castile, as the centre of the kingdom, the name of Castilians is often used to indicate Spaniards in general.

CASTILE (NEW), (Span. Castilla-la-Nueva), an old prov. of Spain, forming the S. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile; cap. Madrid. Is now divided into the provs. of Madrid, Toledo, Ciudad-Real, Cuenca, and Gaudalaxara. This region forms part of the central table land of Spain, bounded N. by the mountains of the Sierra Guadarama, and S. by those of the Sierra Morena, and traversed by several minor chains, which separate broad plains or valleys. Its rivers comprise the upper courses of the Tagus, Guadiana, the Guadalquivir, the Segura, and the Xucar. Climate dry and healthy. On account of the elevation of the surface, the winters are cold. In summer the heat is great in the valleys. Winds are violent and very dry; and in summer the air is loaded with dust. Soil is fertile, but suffers from drought; water is scarce, often for several months in succession it does not rain, and the average annual fall for the table-land is only 10 inches. Agriculture is in a neglected state, yet grain is raised sufficient for consumption. Oil and wine abound in many parts of the prov., the most celebrated wine is that of Val-de-Peñas, in the prov. Ciudad Real. Saffron, mulder, lint, hemp, and fruit, are cultivated. The rearing of cattle is an important branch of industry; horses are of an excellent quality, but not numerous: the sheep of the sierras Cuenca and Molina supply the celebrated merino wool. The mountains of the Sierra Morena afford the richest supply of minerals in the kingdom. The chief mines are those of Almaden. The prov. affords excellent marble and rock salt, and contains numerous mineral springs. The principal manufs. are those of cloth, silk, cotton, and paper.

CASTILE (OLD), (Span. Castilla-la-Vieja), an old prov. of Spain, comprising the N. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile, and forming the new provs. of Burgos, Valladolid, Palencia, Avila, Segovia, Soria, Logrono, and Santander. The S. portion of the territory is traversed by the Sierra Guadarama, and the N. by the mountains of Asturias, while in the centre the Sierra Orea separates the basins of the Ebro and the Douro. The climate is more moist than in New Castile, and is mild in the plains. Timber is rare, except on the mountains; the soil is fertile, and yields abundance of grain in the plains, and wine, madder, oil, lint, and fruits, are produced. Pasturage is excellent, and cattle and sheep are extensively reared. The merino wool of Segovia is considered next in quality to that of Leon. The mountains afford a supply of useful minerals, and there are many mineral springs. Manufs. are unimportant, cloth is still the principal, next to which are leather, paper, glass, & stone-ware. Corn, madder, and wool are the principal articles of export.

Lat. 40° 30' N., lon. 60° 20' E. Extremes length 780 m.; breadth 65 to 150 m. The culminating point of the chain, Mount Elburz, in lat. 43° 20' N., lon. 42° 30' E., rises between the sources of the rivers Kulan and Terek, to an elevation of 18,493 feet. The next in elevation is Mount Kazbek, in lat. 42° 50' N., lon. 44° 20' E., 16,533 feet, but the mean elevation of the other peaks is much less. With few exceptions, the mountains are covered with perpetual ice and snow. W. of Elburz the chain decreases rapidly in height, and on the shores of the Black Sea, it is only about 300 feet in elevation. E. of the central mass it maintains a considerable elevation till it approaches the Caspian Sea. A counterfort, which leaves the central mass in lon. 44° E., runs S. between the rivers Kur and Rion, and connects the Caucasus with the mountains of Armenia. On the S. the Caucasus descends gradually by a succession of terraces, while on the N. it is more abrupt and precipitous. The mountains are either flat or cup-shaped. The existence of glaciers in the Caucasus is uncertain, and there are no lakes of importance; hence the region in general is not well watered. The chief rivers are, on the N. of the chain, the Terek and Kaban, the former of which flows E. to the Caspian, and the latter W. to the Black Sea; and on the S. the Rion, a tributary of the Black, and the Kur of the Caspian Sea. The climate is healthy although tempests are frequent, and the higher plateaux are exposed to burning heats in summer. The soil is fertile in the valleys, and the mountains are covered with timber; every species of grain is abundant, and is cultivated to a height of 5,300 feet, while the lower valleys produce cotton, rice, lint, tobacco, indigo, and wine. The auroch, a species of domestic ox, is still found in the mountains—the forests teem with fur-bearing animals, and the rivers abound in fish. The greater part of the mountains are of secondary formation, interspersed with volcanic rocks. The chain contains no active volcanoes, but is frequently visited by earthquakes. Minerals comprise copper, lead, iron, sulphur, and coal. The only pass which has been rendered practicable for carriages is that from Moudok to Tiflis by the valley of the Terek. The principal pass on the E. is that of Derbend. The Caucasus mountains have been celebrated from the highest antiquity; the people who inhabit them have almost always maintained their independence, and though nominally subject to Russia, many of the tribes still maintain a constant struggle against her authority. The principal tribes are the Circassians, Ossetes, Lezgians, Abasians, Georgians, Minghees, and Mingrelians. The Circassians and Georgians are considered the finest types of the human family, and the Caucasian race is the name by which the white population distributed over Europe, America, and part of Asia and Africa, is distinguished.

CAUCASUS or the CAUCASIAN MOUNTAINS, is the name given to those portions of the Russian empire situated near the Caucasus mountains. These are in Europe Old-Caucasia, comprising the provs. of Stavropol, Circassia, and Daghestan; and in Asia Trans-Caucasia, or the countries situated between Turkey, Persia, the Caspian and the Black Seas, and the range of the Caucasus mountains, comprising the provs. of Abasia, Mingrelia, Imeretia, Georgia, Shirvan, and Russian Armenia. Pop. estimated at 3,000,000, but is sometimes reckoned at double that amount.

CELEBES, a large island, Asiatic archipelago, mostly between lat. $1^{\circ} 60'$ N., and $5^{\circ} 30'$ S., lon. 119° and 125° E. It is of most irregular shape, consisting of 4 peninsulas uniting in a common centre (no point being further than 50 m. from the sea), from which they extend N.E. and S., separated by the Bays of Gorontalo, Tolo, and Boni. Estimated area 78,000 sq. m. Pop. supposed to be between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000. Surface greatly diversified, and well watered by 3 rivers and many streams. Climate healthy. The centre is mountainous, highest part, Lampo Betang mountain, 7,000 feet in elev. There are volcanoes in the N. and S. peninsulas. Minerals are gold, iron, and salt. Extensive grassy plains in the low grounds. Timber is not generally plentiful, but in one part is a large forest. Products, rice, maize, cassava, tobacco, and cotton, with yams, sago, sugar-cane, and excellent breeds of horses and other live stock. The pop. is composed of distinct races; the Turajas or Horafors of the centre being the supposed aborigines. The coasts are inhabited by the Bughis, a maritime commercial people. The Mohamm. Bughis are almost wholly employed in trading with other parts of the archipelago; they collect the native produce of its E. islands, which they exchange at Singapore for calicoes, iron, muskets, gunpowder, and British and Indian manufactures; they have also established flourishing colonies in Flores, Sumbawa, and other islands. The women manufacture cloths and variegated mats. The Badjos or "sea-gypsies," are a people constantly residing on board their vessels; they carry on an active trade with the Chinese, whose ports they visit with cargoes of cotton, birds' nests, tripping, sharks' fins, tortoise-shell, and pearl. Turtles abound on the coasts. Celebes is divided into about 13 independent states, the most powerful being the confederacy of Boni in the S. peninsula. In most of them the government seems to be a limited monarchy. The Dutch have possessed settlements here since they expelled the Portuguese in 1660. They divide the isl. into the gov. of Mangkasser, embracing the two S. peninsulas; the residency of Menado in the N.; and Ternate on the E. Their principal establishments are Menado, near the N.W., and Kema, near the N.E. extremity of the island, both declared free ports in 1640, and Mangkasser on the W. coast, near the S. extremity of the island, where formerly stood the native town of Macassar, the harbour of which was made a free port in 1847. The pop. subject to the Netherlands government amounts to about (1850) 279,000. In 1811, the British took possession of these Dutch settlements, but they were again restored in 1816.

Shape pyriform, with apex to the N. Extreme length from N. to S., 270 m.; greatest breadth 145 m. Area 23,310 miles. Pop. (1848) 1,500,000. The southern and central part of the island is elevated and mountainous, Adam's Peak rising to the height of 7,500 feet, and Pedraaligalla to 8,280 feet. The E. shore is frequently bold and rocky, with deep water. The W. shore is uniformly low, and indented with bays and inlets. The N.W. part of the island is almost joined to the neighbouring peninsula by the island of Manasar, from the west point of which a shoal stretches to the island of Rameserum, a dist. of about 30 m. [ADAM'S BRIDGE], leaving open only two navigable passages, that between Manasar and Ceylon, which has not more than four feet water at ebb tide, and the narrow passage of Paumbum between Rameserum and the mainland, which is six feet in depth at high water. The island is chiefly formed of gneiss, especially in its southern portions, while limestone and sandstone prevail in the more level parts of the northern plains. Dolomite is found in the interior, and hornblende rock forms the summit of Adam's Peak. Among the minerals are iron, manganese, plumbago, nitre in caves, and salt. The climate is hot and moist. On the sea-coast the thermometer ranges from 68° to 90° in the extreme, and the medium between 75° and 80° Fahr. The N.E. monsoon prevails from November to February, modified and interrupted by local circumstances; the S.W. monsoon from April to November. The E. part of the island is hot and dry, the W. temperate and humid. Rivers and streams abound. Rain-fall 85 inches at Colombo, and 120 inches in the hilly districts. The largest river is Mahavella Ganga, which has its origin in the highlands in the S., and flowing N.E. enters the ocean at Trincomali. In the highlands in the S., and on the central range stretching northwards, the temperature is milder than in the valleys. The soil is chiefly ferruginous and quartzose in the S., and sandy and calcareous in the N., with a small proportion of vegetable matter; yet vegetation is most luxuriant, and irrigation appears to have been anciently practised, from artificial tanks and lakes still existing. Rice, cotton, tobacco, pepper, coffee, and various vegetables, are raised. The cocoa palm, Falmira palm, lalipot, jack-tree, tamarind, bread-fruit, and cinnamon, are among the most useful trees; the last is cultivated to a great extent, but some recent attempts to cultivate extensively the sugarcane, appear to have failed. The zoology of the island is much the same as the neighbouring continent. Snakes and reptiles abound. Elephants are numerous in the N. and E. prov. Little is known of the aboriginal inhabitants of Ceylon; at present they are similar in all respects to the Hindoos of the neighbouring continent, and consist of Singalese, inhabiting the interior and parts of the coast, Malabars, Mohammedans, Europeans, and Negroes. Ceylon was known to the Greeks in the time of Alexander, as also to the Romans. The Portuguese formed a settlement at Colombo in 1520. They were superseded by the Dutch in the 17th century; and at the close of the 18th, the British, after various encounters with the Dutch and French, obtained possession of the stations on the coast; and finally, in 1815, at the invitation of the native chiefs, took possession of the whole island. The government now consists of a governor and an executive council of five other members, and legislative council of nine other members, and six unofficial members, natives or naturalized subjects, and proprietors or principal merchants of the island. The island is divided into five provinces, and these into districts, each with an agent and assistant. There are a supreme court, provincial courts, and magistrates. The island was constituted a bishopric of the English Church in 1816. There are besides churches of other denominations. Educational establishments have been formed chiefly by religious and missionary societies. In 1850 there were 84 government schools, with a large attendance of scholars. Buddhism was almost the universal creed of the natives, and still remains so. The Singalese language is peculiar to this island. The British government have formed many excellent roads throughout the island, and there is a canal and river communication between Colombo and Calcutta. The natives are ingenious workers in metals, and in manufactures of cordage, matting, and baskets. In 1842 there were 13 mines of plumbago, and 4,286 boats and rafts employed in fishing. The pearl fishery has been abandoned since 1837. Of the whole surface of the island, 760,821 acres were cultivated or in pasture, and upwards of 4,000,000 acres uncultivated. Exports in 1849, valued at 695,746*l.*; imports do., 1,206,215*l.* The chief towns are Colombo the cap., Candy, Trincomalee, Point-de-Galle, Jaffna, Calcutta. Ceylon is now the central point for the Oriental mail packets. The mail which leaves Southampton every fortnight, via Alexandria and the Red Sea, touches at Ceylon, whence issue branch mails to Madras, Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Australia.

CHILE or CHILI, a republican state, South America, situated along the W. coast of that continent, bounded by the Andes on the E. and Pacific on the W., extending from lat. 23° to 44° 20' S., and between lon. 69° and 74° W. Length from N. to S., including the island of Chiloé, 1,240 m.; breadth from 100 to 240 m. Estim. pop. (1855) 1,449,124. The boundary line separating it on the N. from Bolivia is near Huacabo Parado, its S. limit on the mainland is the Bay of Ancud. The mountain slopes of the Andes form the greater part of Chile. They are here a single range except at two places, where they separate, and include the elevated valleys of Tunuyan and Ispallata. The volcanic peak of Aconcagua rises to an elevation of 23,910 feet, that of Maypo 15,000 ft. There are several passes across the Chilean range: I. Aconcagua at an elevation of 14,000 feet; II. Portillo, 14,770, and III. Tunuyan and Umihue, 12,450 feet. North of the Rio Chiloé the whole country is formed by the declivity of the Andes, except a narrow belt of plain 50 to 50 feet in elevation, bordering the sea. The surface is very irregular, rocky, sandy, and almost barren and uncultivated, except a few spots on the banks of the rivers. S. of Rio Chiloé the country is more diversified. Hills and sterile tracts occupy the middle of this space, but on either side are valleys and plains of considerable fertility. From the Rio Maipo to the Biobío the land becomes more level, and is in general more fertile. The climate of Central Chile is hot and dry. In summer the thermometer rises to 90° and 96° Fahr., in the other seasons the air is more temperate, and the climate, on the whole, healthy. In spring and winter ice is sometimes seen even on the coasts. In some of the valleys, as Copiapo, years pass over without rain falling, but dews are frequent. Farther north showers are only occasional, sometimes at an interval of three years. In the vicinity of the river Biobío rain falls regularly in winter. South of this river the rains are irregular, but fall heavily. In spring the sky is cloudy, but for many months of the year it is clear and transparent. High gales, blowing in particular directions, are not unfrequent, and earthquakes occur very often, particularly near the coast. Snow falls on the summits of the Andes, and, by its gradual melting, affords a supply of water to the rivers. The lower limits of the snow line are,

N. extremity 17,000 feet, in middle 12,780 feet, in S. extremity 8,300 feet. The rivers N. of the Maipo bring down to the coast little water. None are navigable. S. of lat 34° the rains are sufficiently copious to form considerable rivers. The Maipo is navigable for vessels drawing seven feet water. The Biobío, the largest river in the country, has a course of 200 m., is 2 m. wide at its mouth, navigable for boats in its whole course, but too shallow for large vessels. The Calacalla river admits vessels of considerable size. There are no lakes of any importance in the low grounds, and few of any extent known in the Alpine region of the Andes. There are several good harbours, such as those of Valdivia, Concepcion, Valparaiso, and Coquimbo. The tracts through the valleys and ravines are only passable by mules, and good roads and bridges are much needed.

The vegetation of the north of Chile is very limited. Tropical plants do not grow from the extreme dryness of the soil. Farther south Indian corn, wheat, barley, oats, beans, and hemp, are cultivated, and melons, pumpkins, figs, grapes, pomegranates, oranges, peaches, apples, and olives, are abundant. The S. forests also contain a variety of excellent timber trees. This is the native country of the potato. It is found growing in the arid mountains of Central Chile, as well as in the moist regions of the Chonos and Chiloe Isles. Among the animals of prey the puma is the most conspicuous. The guanaco and llama abound in the plains of the S. provinces, and the pastures feed large herds of cattle, horses, asses, mules, and goats. The coast abounds with whale, cod, and pilchard. Jerked beef, tallow, hides, and live stock are exported. Fish is found in the sands of the rivers, and was formerly, though not now, collected. Silver mines exist in the S. Andes, but silver and copper mines are chiefly wrought in the more N. parts; lead and iron are found, but are not wrought. On the river Biobío coal and lignite beds abound, and are partially wrought. The pop. consists of the descendants of the Spaniards and the Aboriginal tribes. All the inhabitants of the Biobío are of European descent, with scarcely any mixture of Indian blood. The Aborigines inhabit almost exclusively the country south of this river. [ARACANTIA.] The religion is Roman Catholic. Chile is divided into 13 provs. of Atacama, Coquimbo, Aconcagua, Santiago, Colchagua, Valparaiso, Talca, Maipo, Udele, Concepcion, Valdivia, Arica, and Chiloé. Manufactures, earthenware, linen cloths, cordage, soap, copperware, leather, and brandy. Exports silver, copper, wheat, wool, and hemp. Imports cottons, woollens, hardware, silk, paper, wine, sugar, tea, and brandy. In 1847, 1,072 ships, of 292,625 tons, entered, and 1,081 ships, of 265,515 tons, cleared from the ports of Chile. Public revenue (1855) 6,297,536 dollars. Expenditure 5,424,086 dollars. Debt 6,480,000 dollars. Armed force 53,182. Navy, one corvette, and four small vessels, carrying a total of 65 guns. Chile was taken possession of by the Spaniards after the conquest of Peru, and a settlement formed at Santiago in 1541. In 1810 the struggle for independence against the mother country commenced, and terminated in 1818 by the battle of Maipo and the formation of a republic. The government is vested in a supreme director, a senate of 20 members, and a house of representatives, to which a deputy is sent for every 20,000 persons. It is at present the best governed and most prosperous of the South American republics. There are a university and lyceum at Santiago, and government schools and seminaries established throughout several districts. Santiago is the capital of the republic and the seat of government.

CHILL, a township, U. S., North America, New York, 10 m. S.W. Rochester. Pop. 2,247.

CHI-LI or PA-CHU-LI, the most N. prov. of China, mostly between lat. 35° and 41° 30' N., lon. 114° and 120° E., having N. Mongolia, E. the Gulf of Pe-che-le, and on the other sides the provs. Shan-tung, Shan-se, and Ho-nan. Pop. 1825 27,900,871. It is well watered, but is the east productive prov. of China Proper; and it owes its importance to containing the capital Peking, and the great depôts of rice and salt for the internal supply of the empire, and of the rattle sent into China from Mongolia. Coal of inferior quality is raised in considerable quantities. The prov. is divided into 11 depts.; chief cities Peking and Yang-ping.

CHI-LI or PA-CHU-LE (GULF OF), an inlet of the Yellow Sea, between lat. 37° 10' and 38° 20' N., lon. 118° and 121° E., communicating N. with the Gulf of Lea-tong, and E. with the Yellow Sea, bounded on other sides by the Chinese provs. Chi-li and Shan-tung. Length and breadth about 150 m. each. It receives the Pei-ho river on W., and the Chan-tou on N.

CHILICOTHE or CHILLICOTHE, a town of the U. S., North America, Ohio, on the Scioto river, and Ohio Canal, 37 m. S. Columbus. Pop. 7,008. It has several churches, court-house, and bank. —Other places of same name are in the states Missouri and Illinois.

CHILKA, a lake of British India, between the presidis. Madras and Bengal. It is 42 m. long from N.E. to S.W., and 15 m. in breadth. A branch of the Mahanuddy river enters it, and in lat. 19° 42' N., lon. 85° 40' E., it enters the sea by a narrow and deep outlet. The lake has several islands, and its waters are salt and shallow.

CHILKEA, a town of British India, presid. of Bengal, upper provs., dist. and 70 m. N.N.W. Bareilly, and a principal mart of the trade between the British territory and Kumaon Tibet.

CHILLANTARA, a town of British India, dist. and 22 m. N.W. Bauda, on r. b. of the Jumna, here crossed by a ferry. The cotton grown in the vicinity is shipped here, and sent down the river to the lower provinces.

CHILMARKET, Chalmart, a town of British India, presid. of Bengal, dist. and 40 m. S.E. Bungepoor, on the Brahmapootra. Pop. 2,000.

CHILON, an island on the W. coast of South America, which, with several smaller islands, forms a prov. of the Chilean republic. It is separated from Patagonia by Gulf of Anoud, and extends from lat. 41° 40' to 43° 20' S., lon. 74° W. It is 120 m. in length, and 40 m. in breadth. Pop. (1843) of prov. 48,878. The island is hilly but not mountainous, and densely covered with wood, except around the coast, where it is partially cleared and cultivated. The climate is temperate, but exceedingly moist; in winter almost incessant rains prevail, with frequent gales from W. to N.W.; the summer is warm, but the air frequently clouded and loaded with moisture; yet, on the whole, it is reckoned healthy. The soil is a rich sandy loam. The chief products are wheat, barley, potatoes, apples, and strawberries; and cattle, sheep, and swine are reared in considerable numbers. The shores produce abundance of shell mollusks; and oysters, mussels, and pisco (a barnacle), form a principal part of the food of the inhabitants. The population consists of natives, originally of Spanish descent, and aboriginal Indians, but the great bulk of the inhabitants are a mixed breed. All are nominally Christians, but in general very ignorant and superstitious. The Indian language has become obsolete, and Spanish is that in general use. Agriculture is in a very primitive state, and the trade carried on is a species of barter, money being scarce. The people are indolent and poor. Schools are general, but the teachers and priests are of a very illiterate grade. A coarse woollen cloth, dyed blue, is the principal local manufacture. Exports comprise provisions, timber, hides, brooms, and woollens. Coal or lignite exists here, but is not wrought. Mines were formerly wrought, but are now given up. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1558. Castro, the ancient capital, was founded in 1568. San Carlos is now the chief town and port. This island was the last to throw off the authority of the Spaniards. The Chiloe archipelago consists of upwards of 60 small islands, about 30 of which are inhabited, and several of them are well cultivated, and contain schools. The prov. is divided into 10 depts., and is governed by an intendant and a provisional assembly, subject to the general government of Chile.

CHILTERN HILLS, a range of chalk hills of England, co. Bucks, the S. part of which they traverse between Goring in Oxfordshire, and Tring in co. Herts. Breadth from 15 to 20 m. Height of principal summit, near Wendover, 905 feet above the sea. The region is said to have been formerly covered with a forest, some traces of which are extant, and it was notoriously infested with depredators, to suppress whose ravages the office of "stewards of the Chiltern hundreds" was estabplaced under the crown. The duties of the office are now only nominal, but the recognition of them is retained to enable members of the House of Commons, by accepting them under the crown, to relinquish their seats in that assembly, which a member cannot otherwise do. There are three Chiffers hundreds, and the office is in the gift of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

CHIMBORAZO, a mountain of South America, and the culminating point of the Andes of Quito. Lat. 1° 30' S., long. 78° W., elevation 21,424 feet. It is in the form of a cone, and perpetually snow-capped. This was long considered the culminating point of the Andes, and the highest mountain in the world; but it is now ascertained that there are many other peaks higher, besides the culminating points of the Himalaya chain. It was ascended by Humboldt, 23d June 1802, to an elevation of 19,346 feet, and again by Bowning and Hall, 10th December 1831, to 19,695 feet.

CHIMERA or KIMAMA, a town of European Turkey, Albania, on the Strait of Otranto, 22 m. N.W. Delvino, at the foot of the range of mountains of same name, anc. Acroceraurus, which terminates at Cape Linguetta, on the Bay of Avlona.

CHINA, a large and important country of Eastern Asia, constituting the principal part of the Chinese empire.—China Proper extends between lat. 30° and 42° N., lon. 96° and 123° E. Greatest length about 1,600 m.; breadth varies from 300 to 1,300 m. Having N. Manchouria and Mongolia, W. Tibet and other dependencies, S. the Burmese, Laos, and Annamese dominions, from S.E. round to N.E. the China and Yellow Seas. It is shut out from its N. dependencies by the great wall, constructed in the 3d century before the Christian era, and which extends over hill and dale for 1,200 miles, varies from 15 to 30 feet in height, and is strengthened at regular intervals by large square towers. This defensive barrier is now in decay. Estim. area of China Proper, 1,798,000 (P) sq. m. Pop. in 1857 estim. by Sir John Bowring at 389,000,000 to 400,000,000. In 1743 the pop. was estim. at 308,000,000. The Chinese empire is composed of 5 great divisions, Manchouria, Mongolia, Turkestan or Little Bocharia, Tibet, and China Proper. The first-named divisions are of great extent, thinly peopled, and much less civilised, than China Proper.

China consists of an elevated region in the N.; an alluvial plain in the centre, through which the Yang-tze-kiang and Hoang-ho rivers flow; and in the S., a region alternately undulating and interspersed with valleys and mountains. It is estimated that 2-3ds of the country are mountainous. Next to the great rivers already named, which rank amongst the largest in Asia, the Yan-ling flowing near Peking, and the Choo-keang or Canton river, are of the highest importance; the prov. Yun-nan is traversed by the main streams, or by considerable affls. of all the great rivers of Further India. Lakes are both numerous and extensive; that of Tong-ting, in the prov. Hou-nan, is stated to be nearly 300 m. in circuit. The coast line has been estimated at 2,500 m. in length, and it is alternately bold and rocky, or low and swampy; it presents, however, many good harbours at the mouths of the rivers and elsewhere. In China the winters are colder, and the summers hotter than in the same parallels of West Europe. Peking in the same lat. as Naples, has its average temperature 9° lower. In the southern provinces, near Canton and Macao, the winter months are intensely dry and cold, March and April bring fogs and a milder temperature. Much rain falls in May, and from July to September there is intense heat, with hurricanes, typhoons, and thunder storms. There are no active volcanoes in China Proper; but in several localities there are hot springs and emissions of gas. The vegetable productions of the country belong chiefly to the temperate zone. The camphor-tree grows to the height of 50 feet, and is a good timber tree; many larger shrubs from which gum varnish is obtained, the craton sebiferum or tallow-tree; an inferior sort of cinnamon-tree, rhubarb, ginseng, smilax, and other herbs, are common. Among the fruits are the China orange, the lichi, loquat, and wampee. The salubrium, a large water lily, yields edible seeds, and the camellia, the oila fragrans, the tree peony, and the Indian chrysanthemum are among the most conspicuous flowers. The wild animals of China, if they ever abounded, have been long since almost extirpated by the cultivation of the land, and the dense population; but the tiger is still known in the forests of Yun-nan, and wild cats in the forests of the S. The domestic dog is uniformly of one variety, of the spauel size, and pale yellow colour. The deer family are now rare. Birds include pheasants, quails, ring-doves, and fishing cormorant. A few harmless reptiles still exist, and the locust frequently commits great devastations. Rice is the principal article of culture, and being the main food of the population, its export is prohibited; wheat, barley, millet, and other grains of temperate climates are raised, especially in the N. and W. provinces, where the climate is similar to that of latitudes much further N. in Europe, the cold being often severe. The density of population among other circumstances, has in many parts compelled the cultivation of every spot of ground at all capable of yielding produce for sustenance, and the mountain sides are often terraced and manured on principles of the strictest economy. The land is cultivated everywhere in small ashes; a farm of 8 or 10 acres is considered large. Kitchen vegetables, oil plants of various kinds, and tobacco are almost universal articles of culture. Tea, the most valuable article of the foreign trade, and also extensively consumed in China, is a product almost peculiar to this region. It is raised chiefly between lat. 25° and 31° N., on a tract extending from the coast inland for 500 or 600 m., and having an area of 850 to 400 sq. n., in the provs. Fo-kien, Ngan-hoei, Kiang-sai, and Che-kiang. The soil on which it grows is composed of disintegrated granite and ferruginous sandstone. During the years 1856-7 the export of tea to the United Kingdom and her colonies, was 87,741,000 lbs.; and of China silk to Great Britain alone, the export was 74,215 bales. The black teas are mostly prepared in Fo-kien, and the green in Ngan-hoei, both derived from one species of plant. The prov. Chih produces large quantities of salt and of coal, which, though of inferior quality, is especially valuable, owing to the general absence of timber or wood for fuel; in the S.E. districts lignite is also found. In Kan-sue great quantities of tobacco are raised; in Che-kiang, silk is the chief article of produce, sugar in the S.; cotton, camphor, ginseng, rhubarb, and other drugs, numerous gums and varnishes, cassia, musk, the precious metals, gems, copper, tin, lead, mercury, arsenic, iron, and the finest porcelain clay, are among the principal products of the empire, the principal mines being in Kwi-choo and Yun-nan; live stock numerous only in the W. provinces. Manufactures are of the most varied, and often of the most exquisite description. Chinese porcelain, silks, embroidery, and lacquered wares are unequalled for brilliancy, richness, and durability; and in carved goods in tortoise-shell, ivory, and horn; in engraving, the manufactures of paper, ink, cabinet-work, and bell-casting, the whole of which are carried on without the aid of machinery. The traffic, in the E. provinces especially, is conducted chiefly by water, and among the most remarkable of the national works for this purpose, is the Grand Canal, extending from Hang-choo-foo N. for 700 m. to the Yan-kiang river. The W. provinces import rice and other grains from the E., in return for metallic and some other products. From Tibet, China imports coarse woolsens, gold, Indian piece goods, shells, rhinoceros' horns, feathers, in return for silks, porcelain, English broad cloths, pearls, coal, and tea. A considerable trade is carried on with Nepal, Bootan, and Kumaon, the exports to which comprise borax, salt, and woollen goods; the returns being in grain, mole skins, tobacco, and Indian rupees. Caravans go frequently from China to Yarkand, and other parts of Chinese Turkestan, with tea and various manufactures, and bring back cattle and raw silk. The overland trade with Burmah is extensive; Bhamo, in the Burmese dominion, is its principal seat, where a large annual mart is held for many months during the year. The trade with Russia is wholly conducted at Kiachia (which see), on the Mongolian frontier, where Chinese raw and manufactured silks, porcelain, rhubarb, sugar-candy, musk, and tea, are exchanged for furs, sheep and lamb skins, and woollen goods. From Liao-tong, on the N. frontier of the prov. Chi-li, wheat, cotton, and drugs are received in return for coarse manufactured goods. The maritime trade is by far the most important. From 70 to 80 junks leave Siam in the summer with grain, sugar, japan wood, betel-nut, also, ivory, gamboge, and take back sugar, pease, cured mutton, and other provisions.

Gold, ebony, tin, edible birds' nests, shark fin, sea-slugs, pepper, and various condiments, are imported from the archipelago. The total maritime export and import trade of China with European nations (Russia excepted), and with the United States in 1855, has been estimated at 9,665,668. The opium exported from Calcutta to China in 1844-5 (independently of that exported from Bombay), amounted to 13,792 chests, worth 2,439,430*l.*; this is still a principal import into China, the trade being tolerated, though not legalized. The emperor is of the Manchoo dynasty, who conquered the country in the 17th century; and the large property of the great offices of state is held by Manchoo Tartars. The government is despotic, and is conducted under the emperor by an "inner" or privy council, a general council; the six supreme boards of civil office, revenue, rites, war, punishment, and public works; a censorate, high courts of memorials and appeals, and the imperial college which regulates every thing relating to literature and science. The last is a most important engine of Chinese polity, literary acquirements being a chief step to advancement in the public service, and schools being universal. The code of laws is reckoned good, and the administration of these on the whole mild; but the slavish subjection in which the administrators are held, and a system of organised espionage on the functionaries, leads to deceit and bribery throughout all the offices of government. The provinces are subdivided into what we may call departments, arrondissements, and districts, or foo, tang, chow, and keen, which titles are respectively affixed to the names of their capital cities and towns. The metropolitan province Chi-li, for instance, which is about as large as England and Wales, consists of 11 foo, 3 tang, 17 chow, and 174 been districts, all under special governors, besides which officers, a tsungshu or governor-general has usually authority over two or more provinces. The standing military force consists of four national divisions—the Manchous in 678 companies of 100 men each; the Mongols in 211 companies, and 106,000 Chinese, all cavalry; and 500,000 native infantry, besides 125,000 irregular troops or militia—in all 829,900 men. Besides these, many troops are stationed in the provinces of Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet, where the government is military, and in all considerable cities there is a garrison of Tartar troops. Since the termination of the contest with England, it is stated that large quantities of military stores have been purchased from the Americans and others, and that the coasts have been newly fortified with great care. In physical character the Chinese rank under the Mongolian family of man; the harsher features of this family being considerably softened. The head and face are square-formed, or angular—the nose flat, lips thick, and eyes small, with oblique eyelids, and cheek-bones prominent. Colour of skin lemon yellow, hair black, beard scanty. While young, both males and females are good-looking, but after 20 the features gradually assume a harsh appearance. The practice of retarding the growth of the foot in females, which is confined chiefly to the upper ranks, renders them lame, and comparatively incapable of active exertion. The Chinese intellect is shrewd, and takes a common sense view of things, not apt to be imaginative or speculative. The disposition is mild and peaceful, but deceitful; filial affection, and parental reverence are cultivated, but deliberate infidelity, practised on motives of expediency, shows a low state of moral feeling. At a very remote

The duties of the office are now only nominal, but the recognition of them is retained to enable members of the House of Commons, by accepting them under the crown, to relinquish their seats in that assembly, which a member cannot otherwise do. There are three Chiltern hundreds, and the office is in the gift of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The disposition is mild and peaceful, but desultory; filial affection, and parental reverence are cultivated, but deliberate infanticide, practised on motives of expediency, shows a low state of moral feeling. At a very remote period, the natives appear to have advanced to a considerable state of civilisation, and to the practice of the arts of domestic life, especially the arts of printing, the invention of the mariner's compass, and the manufacture of silk and porcelain; but here they have paused, and their government and institutions tend not to the further progress of improvement. The language is monosyllabic, and their letters express words and ideas; the roots or original characters amounting to 214. The fine arts have made no great progress; and though education in reading and writing is common, yet they have no pretensions to learning or science. The superstition of Confucius is that adopted by the court and upper classes, and consists in a refined deism, with a great reverence for ancestors, and for the moral precepts of Confucius. Buddhism is the religion of the great mass of the people in China Proper, Manchuria, Mongolia, and Tibet, which last country is its head-quarters, being the seat of its most sacred Lamas. The Taou belief is that next in importance, as respects the number of its votaries. Mohammedans are said to be numerous, especially in the prov. Shen-si; and in Chinese Turkestan they form the majority of the population. Roman Catholics and Jews form a comparatively insignificant proportion of the pop.; of the former there are estimated to be 320,000. The political influence of China extends considerably beyond the territorial limits of her empire, and it is customary for embassies to be sent at stated times, generally from two to five years, from many surrounding countries, with presents to the emperor; other presents of at least an equal value being given back in return. The Chinese court affects to consider the complimentary gifts from foreign states as so much tribute, and in this sense they enumerate Anam, Siam, Barmah, the Laos, Sooloo, the Netherlands, and even Great Britain, as tributary nations. The rule, however, of the present Tartar dynasty, even in the heart of its own dominions, is held by a very uncertain tenure; the Meao-tu tribes in the S.W. provs. of China, and supposed to be their original inhabitants, have repeatedly risen in rebellion: secret societies, the principal of which is called "the Triad," and which has for its object the restoration of a native dynasty, are rapidly extending; and the finances of the empire are believed to be in an unsatisfactory condition, although the revenue is officially stated to amount to 191,604,149 taels, or about 63,934,173*l.* annually. The native records of China ascend as far back as B.C. 2204; and however fabulous their early portion may be considered, there is no doubt that China is the oldest existing dominion on the globe. Some scattered notices of this empire appear in the works of middle-age travellers; but Marco Polo was the first among the moderns to give a detailed account of the country, the commencement of direct European commerce with which dates only since the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. The first attempt of the English to open a trade with China was made in 1637, when 4 merchant vessels arrived at Macao, but through the intrigues of the Portuguese there established, the enterprise failed. Afterwards, the East India Company carried on some small traffic at the different maritime ports, and chiefly at Canton. In 1792, Lord Macartney's embassy attempted to put the trade on a more liberal basis, but with little success. In 1816, Lord Amherst's mission, for a similar purpose, also failed of success, though the English trade continued pretty quiet and steady for the next twenty years. In 1834, the exclusive trade of the East India Company with China terminated, and the country was thrown open to general traders. Still the trade with foreigners was refused to be recognised by the government of Peking, and numerous petty annoyances were continually occurring, till at last, in 1839, the Chinese government forcibly obliged the English merchants at Canton to deliver up 20,283 chests of opium, which having been destroyed, and compensation refused, war was declared by England, and the coasts of China were blockaded by a British naval force, amounting in 1842 to 37 ships, mounting 784 guns, and manned by 7,009 men. After a series of successes, a peace was concluded at Nankin, August 29, 1842, by which European merchants and a British consul were allowed to reside at the ports of Canton, Amoy, Foo-tchow, Ning-po, and Shang-hai; the island of Hong-Kong was ceded to the English in perpetuity, and 6,000,000 taels were agreed to be paid by 7 instalments, as indemnity for the opium destroyed; 3,000,000 taels, as the amount of debts due by insolvent Hong merchants; and 12,000,000 as indemnity for the expenses of the war. In 1847, and again in 1856, fresh outrages led to the capture of the Bogue forts, the bombardment of Canton, and the destruction of junks. On the 26th May 1859, a treaty was entered into between Great Britain, France, and China, by which missionaries are to be protected, freedom granted to Christians to exercise their religion, travellers with passports are allowed to go into the interior, new ports are opened, and the free navigation of the Yang-tse-kiang is declared.
